

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

STATE OF THE STATE

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503

STATE OF THE STATE

Lo Ro

CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series.

CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadian de microreproductions historiques

(C) 1985

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The

The post of file

Oribes the sio oth firs sio or

The she TIP wh

Ma diff ent beg rig req me

	12X	16X	20X		24X		28X		32X
-	item is filmed at th ocument est filmé (	au taux de réd				26X		30X
	Additional comme Commentaires sup
	Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming/ Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.				ensure the best possible image/ Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une pelu etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.			nt ne pelure
	Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin/ Lare liure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distortion le long de la marge intérieure				Only edition available/ Seule édition disponible  Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to
	Bound with other material/ Relié avec d'autres documents				Includes supplementary material/ Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
	Coloured plates and/or illustrations/ Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur				Qualité inégale de l'impression
	Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black)/ Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)			V	Showthrough/ Transparence
	Coloured maps/ Cartes géographiq	ues en couleur			Pages de Pages dé
	Cover title missing Le titre de couvert			V			, stained techetée
	Covers restored ar Couverture restau						d/or lami et/ou pell
	Covers damaged/ Couverture endom				Pages da Pages en	maged/ idommag	óes
V	Coloured covers/ Couverture de cou	leur			Coloured Pages de	pages/ couleur
The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the eproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below.			de d poir une mod	L'institut à microfilme le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lul a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifie une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

Harold Campbell Vaughan Memorial Library Acadia University

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol - (meaning "CON-TINUED"), or the symbol ▼ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

> Harold Campbell Vaughan Memorial Library Acadia University

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit per le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants appareître sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole --- signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole V signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants Illustrent la méthode.

1	2	3

1
2
3

1	2	3
4	5	6

pelure. n à rrata

tails du odifier

une

mage

ROBERTSON'S CHEAP SERIES

一种的一种的极大

POPULAR READING AT POPULAR PRICES.

A TRAMP ABROAD

BY MARK TWAIN.

COMPLETE

J. ROSS ROBERTSON, 55 KING-STREET WEST, SOUTH-WEST CORNER OF BAY-STREET. 1880. THE CONTRACTOR OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPERTY

TOTAL WAS CENTERED TO THE DESIGNATION OF THE PERSON.

CAOBBA GMART A

NET A TAXOU DE STILL IN. W. E.

PS 1321 • A1 1880

AMAZAHKATA.

4. KOPP ROBERTSON OF KINKSTYMER, WILST, SOURCES AROUSE IN ALLS.

1890 - Walter Brown of the Color of the Colo ne and

24 your 2 120 to

will which the state of the sta ma g अवस्था । मानुस्ता व्यक्तिकृतिक वर्णा स्वास्त्रकार्यः - व्यक्तिकृति अप्रकारिकार्यः स्वाहत्यः स्वाहर्यः to a planting EH हेर हैं। इंग्रेड के के किए हैं। इ. ११ के इ. १९ के इ.स. १९१०

A TELLY APREASE

bucks of specificiting from the distribution from the business will schapp the form of years

CHAPTER L

British of I flower moreing no

क्रिया है। जा अधिका अधिका अधिक क्रिया है। the partique line of the grant file that the entre por experience and the service of th

One day it occurred to me that it had been anny years since the world had been afforded the spectacle of a man adventurous enough to undercake a journey through Europe on foot. After much thought, I decided that I was a person fitted to farmish to mankind this spectacle. So I determined to do it. This was in March, 1878.

I looked about me for the right sort of person to accompany me in the ospecity of agent, and finally hired hir. Harris for this service.

It was also my purpose to study act while service.

It was also my purpose to study art while in Europe. Mr. Harris was in sympathy with me in this. He was as much of an enthusiast in art as I was, and no less anxious to learn to paint. I desired to learn the German language; so did Harris.

Toward the middle of April we sailed in the Holastia, Capt. Brandt, and had a very pleasant trip indeed.

After a brief rest at Hamburg, we made preparations for a long pedestrian trip southward in the roft spring weather, but at the last moment we changed the program, for last moment we changed the program, for private reasons, and took the express train. We made a short halt at Frankfort-on-the-Main, and found it an interesting city. I would have liked to visit the birth-place of Guttenberg, but it could not be done, as no memorandure of the site of the house has been kept. So we spect an hour in the Goe-the mansion instead. The city permits this house to belong to private parties, instead of gracing and dignifying herself with the

of gracing and dignifying herself with the honor of possessing and protecting it.

Frankfort is one of the sixteen cities which have the distinction of being the place where the following incident occurred. Charlemagne, while chaning the Saxons, (as he said,) or being chased by them, (as they said,) arrived at the bank of the river at dawn, in a fog. The enemy were either before him or behind him; but in any case he wanted to get across, very badly. He would have given anything for a guide, but none was to be had. Presently he dear, followed by her young, appears water. He watched her, judging the would seek a ford, and he was right. water. He watched her, judging that she would seek a ford, and he was right. She wated over, and the army followed. So a great Frankish victory or defeat was gained or avoided; and in order to commemorate the episode, Charlemagne commanded a city to be built there, which he maned Frankfort,—the ford of the Franka. None of the other cities where this event happened were named from it. This is good evidence that Frankfort was the first place it courred at Frankfort was the first place it courred at Frankfort has another distinction,—it is the birthplace of the German alphabet; or at least of the German word for alphabet; or at least of the German word for alphabet; or at least of the German word for alphabet; or at least of the German word for alphabet;. Buchstabes. They say that the first moveable types were made on birch aticks,—Buchstabes. They say that the first moveable types were made on birch aticks,—Buchstabe,—bence the name.

I was tempt a leason in political coorseny in Frankfort. I had brought from home a box containing a thousand very cheap eigars. By way of experiment, I stepped into a little ahop in a queer old back street, took four gaily doors for boxes of wax matches and three cigars, and laid down a silver piece worth 48 centa. The man gave me 43 cents change.

In Frankfort

repli her river that for it is the a minimum of ंस्कृत है। यन के कर्ता कर्ता

The state of the second states of Latte L , tohist bruse with the change.

In Frankfort everybody wears clear clothes, and I think we noticed that this strange thing was the case in Hamburg teo, strange thing was the case in Hamburg teo, and in the villages along the road. Even in the narrowest and poorest and most ancient quarters of Frankfort nest and clean clothes were the rule. The little children of both sexes were nearly always nice enough to take into a body's lap. And as for the uniforms of the soldiers, they were newness and brightness carried to perfection. One could never detc. a sourch or a grain of dust upon them. The street car conductors and drivers were pretty uniforms which seemed to be just out of the forms which seemed to be just out of the bandbox, and their manners were as fine as their clothes.

their clothes.

In one of the shops I had the luck to stumble upon a book which has charmed me nearly to death. It is entitled 'The Legends of the Rhine from Basle to Rotterdam, by F. J. Kiefer; Translated by L. W. Garnham, B.A.

All tourists mention the Rhine legends,in that sort of way which quietly pretends that the mentioner has been familiar with them all his life, and that the reader cannot possibly be ignorant of them,—but no tonrist ever tells them. So this little book fed me in a very hungry place; and I, in my turn, intend to feed my reader, with one or two little lunches from the same larder. I shall not mar Garnham's translation by meddling with its English; for the most toothsome thing about it is its quaint fashion of building English sentences on the German plan,and punctuating them according to no rlan at all.

In the chapter devoted to 'Legends of Frankfort,' I find the following:

THE KNAVE OF BERGEN.

'In Frankfort at the Romer was a great mask-ball, at the coronation festival, and in the illuminated saloon, the clanging music invited to dance, and splendidly appeared the rich toilets and charms of the ladies, and the festively costumed Princes and Knights. All seemed pleasure, joy, and roguish gay-ety, only one of the numerous guests had a gloomy exterior; but exactly the black ar-mour in which he walked about excited general attention, and his tall figure, as well as the noble propriety of his movements, attracted especially the regards of the ladies. Who the Knight was? Nobody could guess, for his Vizier was well closed, and nothing made him recognizable. Proud and yet modest he advanced to the Empress; bowed on one knee before her seat, and begged for the favour of a waltz with the Queen of the festival. And she allowed his request. With light and graceful steps he danced shrough the long saloon, with the sovereign she thought never to have found a more dexterous and excellent dancer. But also by the grace of his manner, and fine conversation he knew to win the Queen, and she graciously accorded him a second dance for which he begged, a third, and a fourth, as well as others were not refused him. How all re-garded the happy dancer, how many envied him the high favour; how increased curiosity, who the masked knight could be.

Also the Emperor became more and more excited with curiosity, and with great sus-pense one awaited the hour, when according to mask-law, each masked guest must make himself known. This moment came, but although all others had unmasked; the secret knight still refused to allow his features to be seen, till at last the Queen driven by ouriosity, and vexed at the obstinate refusal; commanded him to open his Vizier. He opened it, and none of the high ladies and knights knew him. But from the orowded spectators, 2 officials advanced, who recognized the black dancer, and horror and terror spread in the saloon, as they said who the supposed knight was. It was the executioner of Bergen. But glowing with rage, the King commanded to seize the oriminal and lead him to death, who had ventured to dance with the queen; so disgraced the Empress, and insulted the crown. The cul-pable threw himself at the feet of the Emperor and said:

"Indeed I have heavily sinned against all noble guests assembled here, but most heavily against you my sovereign and my queen. The Queen is insulted by my haughtiness equal to treason, but no punishment even blood, will not be able to wash out the disgrace which you have suffered by me. Therefore oh King! allow me to propose a remedy, to efface the shame, and to render it as if not done. Draw your sword and knight me, then I will throw down my gauntlet to every one who dares to speak disrespectfully of my king." The Emperor was surprised at this bold proposal, however it appeared the wisest to him.

"You are a knave," he replied after a moment's consideration, "however your advice is good, and displays prudence, as your offense shows adventurous courage. then," and gave him the knight stroke, "so I raise you to nobility, who begged for grace for your offence now kneels before me, rise as a knight; knavish you have acted, and Knave of Bergen shall you be called hence-forth,"and gladly the black knight rose; three cheers were given in honour of the Emperor, and loud cries of joy testified the approbation with which the Queen danced still once with the Knave of Bergen.

CHAPTER IL

HEIDELBERG.

We stopped at a hotel by the railway station. Next morning, as we sat in my room waiting for breakfast to come up, we got a good deal interested in something which was going on over the way in front of another hotel. going on over the way in Front of another notes. First, the personage who is called the portier (who is not the porter, but is a sort of first-mate of a hotel), appeared at the door in a spick and span new blue cloth uniform, decorated with shining brass buttons, and with

* See App. A.

P

8

0

p

ō

8 W

. 8

r

ti

h

bands of gold lace around his cap and wristbands; and he were white gloves, too. shed an official glance upon the situation and then began to give orders. Two women servants came out with pails and brooms and brushes, and gave the sidewalk a thorough sorubbing; meanwhile two others sorubbed the four marble steps which led up to the door; beyond these we could see some men-servants taking up the carpet of the grand staircase. This carpet was carried away and the last grain of dust beaten and banged and swept out of it; then brought back and put down The brass stair rods received an exhaustive polishing and were returned to their Now a troop of servants brought pots and tubs of blooming plants and formed them into a beautiful jungle about the door and the base of the staircase. Other servants adorned all the balconies of the various stories with flowers and banners; others ascended to the roof and hoisted a great flag Now came some more on a staff there. chambermaids and retouched the sidewalk, and afterwards wiped the marble steps with damp cloths and finished by dusting them Now a broad off with feather brushes. black carpet was brought out and laid down the marble steps and out across the sidewalk to the ourbstone. The portier cast his eye along it, and found it was not absolutely atraight; he commanded it to be straightened; the servants made the effort-made several

he put it down himself and got it right. At this stage of the proceedings, a narrow bright red carpet was unrolled and stretched from the top of the marble steps to the curbstone, along the center of the black carpe This red path cost the portier more trouble than even the black one had done. But he patiently fixed and re-fixed it until it was exactly right and lay precisely in the middle of the black carpet. In New York these performances would have gathered a mighty crowd of ourious and intensely interested spectators; but here it only captured an audience of half-a-dozen little boys, who stood in a row across the pavement, some with their school knapsacks on their backs and their hands in their pockets, others with arms full of bundles, and all absorbed in the show. Occasionally one of them skipped irreverently over the carpet and took up a posi-tien on the other side. This always visibly annoyed the portier.

efforts, in fact-but the portier was not satisfied. He finally had it taken up, and then

Now came a waiting interval. The landlord in plain clothes, and bareheaded, placed himself on the bettom marble step, abreast the portier, who stood on the other end of the same steps; six or eight waiters, gloved, bareheaded, and wearing their whitest linen, their whitest oravate, and their finest swallow-tails, grouped themselves about these chiefs, but leaving the carpet-way clear. Nobody moved or spoke any more but only waited

In a short time the shrill piping of a coming train was heard, and immediately groups of people began to gather in the street. Two or three open carriages arrived, and deposited some maids of honor and some male officials at the hotel. Presently another open carriage brought the Grand Duke of Baden, a stately man in uniform, who wore the handsome brass-mounted, steel-spiked helmes of the army on his head. Last came the Empress of Germany and the Grand Duchess of Baden in a close carriage; these passed through the low-howing groups of servants and disappeared in the hotel, exhibiting to us only the backs of their heads and then the show was over.

It appears to be as difficult to land monarch as it is to launch a ship.

But as to Heidelberg. The weather was But as to Heidelberg. The weather was growing pretty warm—very warm, in fact. So we left the valley and took quarters at the Schloss House, on the hill above the Heidelberg lies at the mouth of a narrow the " gorge shape shepherd's crook; if one looks up it he perceives that it is about straight for a mile and a half, then makes a sharp curve to the right and disappears. This gorge,—along whose bottom pours the swift Neckar,—is confined between (or cloven through) a couple of long, steep ridges, a thousand feet high and densely wooded clear to their summits, with the exception of one section which has been shaved and put under cultivation. These ridges are chopped off at the mouth of the gorge and form two bold and conspicuous headlands, with Heidelberg nestling between them; from their bases spreads away the wast dim expanse of the Rhine valley, and into this expanse the Neckar goes wandering in shining curves and is presently lost to

Now if one turns and looks up the gorge once more, he will see the Schloss hotel on the right, perched on a precipice overlooking the Neckar, -a precipice which is so sumptuously cushioned and draped with folisge that no glimpse of the rock appears. The building seems very airly situated. It has the appearance of being on a shelf half way up the wooden mountain side; and as it is remote and isolated, and very white, it makes a strong mark against the lofty leafy rampart at its back.

This hotel had a feature which was a d en.

re

er,

ies

he

d,

TOP

id

he

ith

m.

he

the

all ily

ren.

ne.

. .

r it

ght

illy

old

t to

movice

our

Vell

ace

rise

and ree

ror,

rith

om

t a

tel. tier

ratn s

de-

ith

cided novelty; and one which might be adopted with advantage by any house which is perched in a commanding situation. This feature may be described as a series of glass-enclosed parlours clinging to the outside of the house, one against each and every bedchamber and drawing-room. They are like long, narrow, high-ceiled bird-cages hung against the building. My room was a corner room, and had two of these things, a north one and a west one.

From the north cage one looks up the Neckar gorge; from the west one he looks down it. This last affords the most extensive view, and it is one of the loveliest that can be imagined, too. Out of a billowy up-heaval of vivid green foliage, a rifle-shot removed, rises the huge ruin of Heidelberg Castle, " with empty window arches, ivy-mailed battlements, moldering towers—the Lear of inanimate nature,—deserted, dies crowned, beaten by the storms, but royal still, and beautiful. It is a fine sight to see the evening sunlight suddenly strike the leafy declivity at the Castle's base and dash up it and drench it as with a luminous apray, while the adjacent groves are in deep shadow.

Behind the Castle swells a great domeshaped hill, forest-clad, and beyond that a nobler and loftier one. The Castle looks down upon the compact brown-roofed town; and from the town two picturesque old bridges span the river. Now the view broadens; through the gateway of the sen-tinel headlands you gaze out over the wide Rhine plain, which stretches away, softly and richly tinted, grows gradually and dreamily indistinct, and finally melts imperceptibly into the remote horizon.

I have never enjoyed a view which had such a serene and satisfying charm about it as this one gives.

The first night we were there, we went to bed and to sleep early; but I awoke at the end of two or three bours, and lay a comfortable while listening to the soothing patter of the rain against the balcony windows. I took it to be rain, but it turned out to be only the murmur of the reckless Neckar tumbling over her dikes and dams far below, in the gorge. I got up and went to the west balcony and asw a wonderful sight. Away down on the level, under the black mass of the Castle, the town lay, atretched along the river, its intricate cobweb of streets jeweled with twinkling lights; there were rows of lights on the bridges; these flung lances of light upon the water, in the black shadows of the arches; and away at the extremity of all feels when he finds that a human stranger this fairy spectacle blinked and glowed a massed multitude of gas jots which seemed to cover sores of ground; it was as if all the diamonds in the world had been spread out there. I did not know before, that a half mile of sextuple railway tracks could be made such an adornment.

to phis sho cro abo cou he her on'u

no i

his dow

eye thre

the

ohu

SWO

adv

the

cam

and two of b emb This

adve

out

enjo

peop

laug

ing I

800 E

knev

outl yet W

and.

hum Brou

argu

The

supp

unde

man

midd

lived

the only

I

One thinks Heidelberg by day-with its surroundings—is the last possibility of the beautiful; but when he sees Heidelberg by night, a fallen milky way, with that glittering railway constellation pinned to the border, he requires time to consider upon the verdict.

One never tires of poking about in the dense woods that clothe all these lofty Neckar hills to their tops. The great deeps of a boundless forest have a beguiling and impres-aive charm in any country; but German legends and fairy tales have given these an added charm. They have peopled all that region with gnomes, and dwarfs, and all sorts of mysterious and uncanny creatures. At the time I am writing of, I had been reading so much of this literature that sometimes I was not sure but I was beginning to believe in the gnomes and fairies as realities

One afternoon I got lost in the woods about a mile from the hotel, and presently fell into a train of dreamy thought about animals which talk, and kobolds, and enchanted folk, and the rest of the pleasant legendary stuff; and so, by stimulating my fancy, I finally got to imagining I glimpeed small flitting shapes here and there down the columned aisles of the forest. It was a place which was peculiarly meet for the ocuasion. It was a pine wood, with so thick and soft a carpet of brown needles that one's footfall made no more sound than if he was treading on wool; the tree-trunks were as round and straight and smooth as pillars, and stood close together, they were bare of branches to a point about twenty-five feet above ground, and from there upward so thick with boughs that not a ray of sun-light could pierce through. The world was bright with sunshine outside, but a deep and mellow twilight reigned in there, and also a silence so profound that I seemed to hear my own breathings.

When I had stood ten minutes, thinking and imagining, and getting my spirit in tune with the place, and in the right mood to enjoy the supernatural, a raven suddenly uttered a hoarse croak over my head. It made me start; and then I was angry because I started. I looked up, and the creature was started. I looked up, and the creature was sitting on a limb right over me, looking down at me. I felt something of the same sense of humiliation and injury which one feels when he finds that a human stranger privacy and mentally commesting upon him. privacy and mentally comme tung upon aim. I eyed the raven, and the raven eyed me. Nothing was said during some scoods. Then the bird stepped a little way along his limb to get a better point of observation, lifted his wings, stuck his head far down below his shoulders, toward me, and croaked again—a croak with a distinctly insulting expression about it. If he had speken in English he could not have add one was a pilely then could not have said any more plainly than he did say in raven, 'Well, what do want here?' I felt as foolish as if I had been cought in some mean act by a responsible being, and reproved for it. However, I made no reply; I would not bandy words with a raven. The adversary waited a while, with his shoulders still lifted, his head threat down between them, and his keen bright eye fixed on me; then he threw out two or three more insults, which I could not understand, further than that I knew a portion of them consisted of language not used in church.

I still made no reply. Now the adversary raised his head and called. There was an answering croak from a little distance in the wood, -evidently a croak of inquiry. The adversary explained with enthusiasm, and the other raven dropped everything and came. The two sat side by side on the limb and discussed me as freely and offensively as two great naturalists might discuss a new kind of bug. The thing became more and more embarrassing. They called in another friend. This was too much. I saw that they had the advantage of me, and so I concluded to get out of the scrape by walking out of it. They enjoyed my defeat as much as anylow white people could have done. They craned their necks and laughed at me, (for a raven can laugh, just like a man,) they squalled insulting remarks after me as long as they could see me. They were nothing but ravens-I knew that, -what they thought about me ounld be a matter of no consequence, -and yet when even a raven shouts after you, 'What a hat !' 'O, pull down your vest !' and that sort of thing, it hurts you and humiliates you, and there is no getting around it with fine reasoning and pretty Animals talk to each coher, of course. There can be no question about that; but I suppose there are very few people who can understand them. I never knew but one man who could. I knew he could, however, because he told me so himself. He was a middle-aged, simple-hearted miner who had lived in a lenely corner of California, among the woods and mountains, a good many years, and had studied the ways of his until he believed he could accurately tran was Jim Baker. According to Jim Baker, some animals have only a limited education, and use only very simple words, and scarcely ever a comparison of a flowery figure; whereas, certain other animals have a large vocabulary, a fine command of language and a ready and fluent delivery; consequently these latter talk a great deal; they like it; they are conscious of their talent, and they enjoy 'showing off.' Baker said, that after long and careful observation, he had dome to the conclusion that the blue-jays were the best talkers he had found among birds and beasts. Said he :-

'There's more to a blue-jay than any other creature. He has got more moods, and more different kinds of feelings than other creatures; and mind you, whatever a blue-jay feels, he can put into language. And no mere common-place language, either, but rattling, out-and-out book talk—and bristling with metaphor, too--just bristling! And as for command of language—why you never see a blue-jay get stuck for a word. No man ever did. They just boil out of him ! And another thing: I've noticed a good deal, and there's no bird, or cow, or anything that uses as good grammar as a blue-jay. You may say a cat usee good gramblue-jay. You may say a cat uses good grammar. Well, a cat does—but you let a cat get excited, once: you let a cat get to pulling fur with another cat on a shed, nights, and you'll hear grammar that will give you the lookjaw. Ignorant people think it's the noise which fighting cats make that is so aggravating, but it ain't so ; it's the sickening grammar they use. Now I've never heard a jay use bad grammar but very seldom; and when they do, they are as ashamed as a human; they shut right down and leave.'

'You may call a jay a bird. Well, so he is, in a measure—because he's got feathers on him, and don't belong to no church, perhaps; but otherwise he is just as much hu-And I'll tell you for why. man as you be. A jay's gifts, and instincts, and feelings, and interests cover the whole ground. A jay hasn't got any more principle than a Congressman. A jay will lie, a jay will steal, a jay will deceive, a jay will betray; and four times out of five a jay will go back on its solemnest promise. The sacredness of an solemnest promise. The sacreumes obligation is a thing which you can't cram into no blue-jay's head. Now on top of all this there's another thing; a jay can entthink a cat can swear. Well, a cat can; but you give a blue-jay a subject that calls for his reserve powers, and where is your only neighbours, the beasts and the birds, | cat? Den't talk to me-I knew too much

med

out

the

by ter-

bor-

the

kar of a res-

man

a an that

orts

At

ling

es I

ieve

mt

into nals

ated lary

y, I nall

the

8 & 0UB-

and

ne's

WAS

as

of

eet

80

-מט

was and so a

my

ing

ane

en-

ut-

e de e I vas ing

me

Diie ger his

And there's yet another about this thing. thing: in the one little particular of scolding -just good, clean, out and out scoiding—a blue-jay can lay over anything; human or divine. Yes, sir, a jay is everything that a man is. A jay can cry, a jay can laugh, a jay can feel shame, a jay can reason and plan and discuss, a jay likes gossip and scandal, a juy has got a sense of humour, a jay knows when he is an ass just as well as you do-may be better.

If a jay ain't human, he better take in his sign, that's all. Now I'm going to tell you a perfectly true fact about some blue-jays.

CHAPTER III.

BAKER'S BLUE JAY YARN.

When I first began to understand jay language cerrectly, there was a little incident Seven years ago the last happened here. man in this region but me moved away. There stands his house-been empty ever since; a log house with a plank roof-just one big room, and no more; no ceilingthing between the rafters and the floor. Well, one Sunday morning I was sitting out here in front of my cabin with my cat, taking the sun and looking at the blue hills, and listening to the leaves rustling so lonely in the trees, and thinking of home away yonder in the States that I hadn't heard from in thirteen years, when a blue jay lit on that house, with an acorn in his mouth, and says, "Hello, I reckon I've struck something.

When he spoke, the acorn dropped out of his mouth and rolled down the roof, of course, but he didn't care; his mouth was all on the thing he had struck. It was a knot hole in He cocked his head to one side, the roof. shut one eye and put the other one to the hole, like a possum looking down a jug; then he glanced up with his bright eyes, gave a wink or two with his wings -which signifies gratification, you understand—and says, "It looks like a hole, it's located like a hole blamed if I don't believe it is a hole!"

'Then he cocked his head down and took another look; he glances up perfectly joyful, this time; winks his wings and his tail both, and says, 'O, no, this sin't no fat thing I reckon! If I ain't in luck!—why it's a perfectly elegant hole! So he flew down and got that acorn, and fetched it up and dropped it in, and was just tilting his head back, with the heavenliest smile on his face, when all of a sudden he was paralyzed into a listening attitude and that smile faded gradually out of his countenance like breath off n a razor, and the queerest look of sur-prise took its place. Then he says, Why I didn't hear it fall !' He cocked his eye at the hole again, and took a long look; raised up and shook his head; stepped around to the other side of the hole and took another look from that side; shook his head again. He studied a while, then he just went into the details, walked round and round the hole and spied into it from every point of the compass. No use. Now he took a thinking attitude on the comb of the roof and scratched the back of his head with his right foot a minute, and finally says, 'Well, it's too many for me, that's certain; must be a mighty long hole; however, I ain't got no time to fool around here, I got to 'tend to business; I reckon it's all right—chance it,

So he flew off and fetched another acorr and dropped it in, and tried to flirt his eye to the hole quick enough to see what become of it, but he was too late. He held his eye there as much as a minute; then he raised up and sighed, and says, 'Confound it, I don't seem to understand this thing, no way; however, I'll tackle her again.' He fetched another acorn, and done his level best to see what become of it, but he couldn't. says, Well, I never struck no such 'a hole as this before; I'm of the opinion it's a totally new kind of a hole.' Then he begun to get mad. He held in for a spell, walking up and down the comb of the roof and shaking his head and muttering to himself; but his feelings got the upper hand of him presently. and he broke loose and cussed himself black in the face. I never see a bird take on so about a little thing. When he got through he walks to the hole and looks in again for half a minute; then he says, 'Well, you're a long hole, and a deep hole, and a mighty singular hele altogether-but I've started in to fill you, and I'm d-d if I don't fill you, if it takes a hundred years!

'And with that, away he went. never see a bird work so since you was born. He laid into his work like a nigger, and the way he hove acorns into that hole for about two hours and a half was one of the most exciting and astonishing spectacles I ever struck. He never stopped to take a look any more—he just hove em in and went for more. Well at last he could hardly flop his wings, he was so tuckered out. He comes a-drooping down, once more, aweating like an ice-pitcher, drops his acorn in and say 'Now I guess I've got the bulge on you by this time!' So he bent down for a look. If you'll believe me, when his head come up again he was just pale with rage. He says, 'I've shoveled acorns enough in there to keep the family thirty years, and if I can see a sign of one of 'em I wish I may land in a sio fan me him inq him yon me, wen He · No erer He rais The the all d hear of h more

mt

mi

on chi

whol ed a myst him. too. at la on it the r lay t He Cor body to fil

'pea

must

such

and o

came 88 es gland that and l laugh done ٠V

the h guffa It air got a And from down years all se museum with a belly full of sawdust in two minutes!

'He just had strength enough to orawl up on to the comb and lean his back agin the chimbly, and then be collected his impressions and begun to free his mind. I see in a second that what I had mistook for profanity in the mines was only just the rudiments, as you may say.

'Another jay was going by, and heard him doing his devotions, and stops to inquire what was up. The sufferer told him the whole circumstance, and says, 'Now yonder's the hole, and if you don't believe me, go and look for yourself.' So this fellow went and looked, and comes back and says, 'How many did you say you put in there?' 'Not any less than two tons,' says the sufferer. The other jay went and looked again. He couldn't seem to make it out, so he raised a yell, and three more jays come. They all examined the hole, they all made the sufferer tell it over again, then they all discussed it, and got off as many leather-headed opinions about it as an average crowd of humans could have done.

of humans could have done. 'They called in more jays; then more and more, till pretty soon this whole region peared to have a blue flush about it. There must have been five thousand of them; and such another jawing and disputing and ripping and oussing, you never heard. Every jav in the whole lot put his eye to the hole and delivered a more chuckle-headed opinion about the mystery than the jay that went there before him. They examined the house all over, him. They examined the house all over, too. The door was standing half open, and at last one old jay happened to go and light on it and look in. Of course that knocked the mystery galley-west in a second. There lay the acorns, scattered all over the floor. He flopped his wings and raised a whoop. 'Come here!' he says, 'Come here, everybody; hang'd if this fool hasn't been trying to fill up a house with acorns! They all came a-swooping down like a blue cloud, and as each fellow lit on the door and took a glance, the whole absurdity of the contract that that first jay had tackled, bit him home and he fell over backwards suffocating with done the same.

'Well, air, they roosted around here on the house-top and the trees for an hour, and guffawed over that thing like human beings. It ain't any use to tell me a blue-jay hasn't got a sense of humor, because I know better. And memory, too. They brought jays here from all over the United States to look down that hole, every summer for three years. Other birds too. And they could all see the point, except an owl that come laughter, and the next jay took his place and from Nova Scotia to visit the Yo Semite, and he took this thing in on his way back. He said he couldn't see anything funny in it. But then he was a good deal disappointed about Yo Semite, too.'

CHAPTER IV.

STUDENT LIFE.

The summer semester was in full tide, consequently the most frequent figure in and about Heidelberg was the student. Most of the students were Germans, of course, but the representatives of foreign lands were very numerous. They hailed from every corner of the globe,—for instruction is cheap in Heidelberg, and so is living, too. The Anglo-American Club, composed of British and American students, had twenty-five members, and there was still much material left to draw from.

Nine-tenths of the Heidelberg students wore no badge or uniform; the other tenth wore caps of various colours, and belonged to social organizations called 'corps.' There were five corps, each with a colour of its own; there were white caps, blue caps, and red, yellow, and green ones. The famous duel fighting is confined to the 'corps' boys. The 'kneip' seems to be a specialty of theirs, too. Kneips are held, now and then, to celebrate great occasions,-like the election of a beer king, for instance. The solemnity is simple; the five corps assemble at night, and at a signal they all fall loading themselves with beer, out of pint-muga, as fast as possible, and each man keeps his own count, -usually by laying aside a lucifer match for each mug he empties. The election is soon decided. When the candidates can hold no more, a count is instituted and the one who has drank the greatest number of pints is proclaimed king. I was told that the last beer king elected by the corps—or by his own capabilities -- emptied his mug seventy five times. No stomach could hold all that quantity at one time, of course—but there are ways of frequently creating a vacuum, which those who have been much at sea will understand.

One sees so many students abroad at all hours, that he presently begins to wonder if they ever have any working hours. Some of them have, and some of them haven't. Each can choose for himself whether he will work or play; for German university life is a very free life; it seems to have no restraints. The student does not live in the college buildings, but hires his own lodgings, in any locality he prefers, and he takes his meals when and where he pleases. He goes to bed when it is eye at ; raised

Harmon M.

round to

d again. rent into und the point of

took a

the roof

with his

·Well,

must be

't got no 'tend to

hance it,

er acorr t his eye

become

his eye

aised up

I don't

o way ;

fetched

at to see

h 'a hole

it's a to-

begun to

lking up

shaking

but his

elf black

through gain for

, you're mighty

arted in

fill you,

t. You

and the

or about nost ex-

I ever

a look

vent for flop his

e comes ng like d say(

you by

look.

ome un

le says,

here to

can see

nd in a

n't. He

suits him, and does not get up at all unles ne wants to. He is not entered at the university for any particular length of time; so ne is likely to change about. He passes no examination upon entering college. He merely pays a trifling of five or ten dol-lars, receives a card entitling him to the privileges of the university, and that is the end of it. He is now ready for business,—or play, as he shall prefer. If he elects to work, he finds a large list of lectures to choose from, He selects the subjects which he will study, and enters his name for these studies; but he can skip attendance.

The result of this system is, that lecturecourses upon specialties of an unusal nature are often delivered to very alim audiences, while those upon more practical and everyday matters of education are delivered to very large ones. I heard of one case where, day after day, the lecturer's audience consisted of three students,—and always the same three. But one day two of them remained away, the lecturer began as usual,— Gentlemen,—

-then, without a smile,

he corrected himself, saying,— 'Sir,'

and went on with his discourse.

It is said that the vast majority of the Heidelberg students are hard workers, and make the most of their opportunities; that they have no surplus means to spend in dissipation, and no time to spare for frolicking. One lecture follows right on the heels of another, with very little time for the student to get out of one hall into the next : but the industrious ones manage it by going on a trot. The professors assist them in the saving of their time by being promptly in their little boxed up pulpits when the hours strike, and as promptly out again when the hour finishes. I entered an empty lecture room one day just before the clock struck. The place had simple, unpainted pine desks and benches for about 200 persons.

About a minute before the clock struck, a hundred and fifty students swarmed in, rushed to their seats, immediately spread open their note-books and dipped their pens in the ink. When the clock began to strike, a burly professor entered, was received with a round of applause, moved swiftly down the center aisle, said 'Gentlemen,' and began to talk as he climbed his pulpit steps; and by the time he had arrived in his box and faced his audience, his lecture was well under way and all the pens were going. He had no notes, he talked with prodigious raunderstood ways that his time was up : he seized his hat, still talking, proceeded swiftly down his pulpit steps, got out the last word of his discourse as he atruck the floor everybody rose respectfully, and he swept rapidly down the siale and disappeared. An instant rush for some other lecture room followed, and iz a minute I was alone with the empty bencher once more

Maria 1441 1 18

Yes, without doubt, idle students are not the rule. Out of eight hundred in the town, I know the faces of only about fifty; but these I saw everywhere, and daily. They walked about the streets and the wooded hills, they drove in cabs, they boated on the river, they sipped beer and coffee afternoons in the Schloss gardens. A good many of them were the coloured caps of the corps. They were finely and fashionably dressed. and their manners were quite superb, and they led an easy, careless, comfortable life. If a dozen of them sat together, and a lady or gentleman passed whom one of them knew and saluted, they all rose to their feet and took off their caps. The members of a corps always received a fellow-member in this way too; but they paid no attention to members of other corps; they did not seem to see them. This was not a discourtesy, it was only a part of the elaborate and rigio Corps etiquette.

There seems to be no chilly distance existing between the German students and the professor; but on the contrary, a companionable intercouse, the opposite of chilliness and reserve. When the professor enters a beer hall in the evening where students are gathered together, these rise up and take off their caps and invite the old gentleman to sit with them and partake. He accepts, and the pleasant talk and the beer flow for an hour or two, and by and by the professor, properly charged and comfortable, gives a cornial good night, while the students stand bowing and uncovered; and then he moves on his happy way homeward with all his vast cargo of learning afloat in his hold. Nobody finds fault or feels outraged; no harm has been done.

It seemed to be a part of the corps-etiquette to keep a dog or so, too. I mean a corps-dog -the common property of the organization, like the corps steward or head servant; then there are other dogs, owned by individuals.

On a summer afternoon in the Castle gardens, I have seen six students march solemnly into the grounds, in single file, each carrying a bright Chinese parasol and leadpidity and energy for an hour,—then the carrying a bright Chinese parasol and lead-students began to remind him in certain well ing a prodigious dog by a atring. It was a very i would pávilio of all dogs h for an they o ever, they It se should

had the women

one spe

other, lady to be the acems adverti be just ing to t easy-go an emp spent ni system vigorous alave. nasium tensive versity. its profe when a only has knows w with un it will at ly read same wi clear of severe. mansard tion; bu his mans steeple i as a part eases of cient Go tends on chosen b

his dog a

the rest

bondage

universit

and thor

not last

while it

against t

THE TOTAL PRINCIPLE 1

Garage Alle Barres

up ; he roceeded got out as i he respectlown the ant rush d, and iz y bencher are not the town. fifty; but ly. They e wooded ed on the fternoons many of the corps. dressed perb, and table life. nd a lady of them their feet abers of a nember in tention to not seem ourtesy, it and rigio istance ex-

dents and ntrary, a pposite of professoring where te the old partake. talk and ro, and by charged ial: good wing and his happy cargo of ody finds

-etiquette corps-dog nization. servant; by indi-

has been

astle gar-h solemnile, each It was a very imposing spect A Sometimes there would be about as many dogs around the pavilion as students; and of all breeds and of all degrees of beauty and ugliness. These dogs had a rather dry time of it; for they were tied to the benches and had no amusement for an hour or two at a time except what they could get out of pawing at the gnats, or trying to sleep and not succeeding. However, they got a lump of sugar occasionally they were fond of that,

It seemed right and proper that students should indulge in dogs; but every body else had them, too—old men and young ones, old women and nice young ladies. If there is one spectacle that is unpleasanter than another, it is of an elegantly-dressed young lady towing a dog by a string. It is said to be the sign and symbol of blighted love. It seems to me that some other way of advertising it might be devised, which would be just as conspicuous and yet not so trying to the properties.

It would be a mistake to suppose that the easy-going pleasure-seeking student carries an empty head. Just the contrary. He has spent nine years in the gymnasium, under a system which allowed him no freedom, but vigorously compelled him to work like a slave. Consequently he has left the gymnasium with an education which is so extensive and complete, that the most a university can do for it is to perfect some of its profounder specialties. It is said that when a pupil leaves the gymnasium, he not only has a comprehensive education, but he knows what he knows-it is not befogged with uncertainty, it is burnt into him so that it will stay. For instance, he does not merely read and write Greek, but speaks it; the same with the Latin. Foreign youth steer clear of the gymnasium; its rules are too They go to the university to put a severe. mansard roof on their whole general education; but the German student already has his mansard roof, so he goes there to add a steeple in the nature of some specialty, such as a particular branch of law, or medicine, or philology—like international law, or diseases of the eye, or special study of the ancient Gothic tongues. So this German attends only the lectures which belong to the chosen branch, and drinks his beer and tows his dog around and has a general good time the rest of the day. He has been in rigid bondage so long that the large liberty of university life is just what he needs and likes and thoroughly appreciates; and as it can-not last forever, he makes the most of it the chains once more and enter the slavery of official or professional life.

Chapter V. 191 2 191

AT THE STUDENTS' DUELING GROUND.

One day in the interest of science my agent obtained permission to bring me to the stu-dents' dueling place. We crossed the river and drove up the bank a few hundred yards, then turned to the left, entered a narrow alley, followed it a hundred yards and arrived at a two-story public house ; we were acquainted with its outside aspect, for it was visible from the hotel. We went up stairs and passed into a large whitewashed apartment which was perhaps fifty feet long, by thirty feet wide and twenty or twenty. five high. It was a well lighted place. There was no carpet. Across one end and down both sides of the room extended a row of tables, and at these tables some fifty or seventy-five students were sitting.

Some of them were sipping wine. others were playing cards, others chess, other groups were chattering together, and many were smoking cigarettes while they waited for the coming duels. Nearly all of them wore coloured caps ; there were white caps, green caps, blue caps, red caps, and bright yellow ones , so all the five corps were present in strong force. In the windows at the vacant end of the room stood six or eight long, narrow-bladed swords with large protecting guards for the hand, and outside was a man at work sharpening others on the grindstone. He understood his business; for when a sword left his hand one could shave himself with it.

It was observable that the young gentlemen neither bowed to nor spoke with atadeuts whose caps differed in colour from their own. This did not mean hostility, but only an armed neutrality. It was considered that a person could strike harder in the duel, and with a more earnest interest, if he had never been in a condition of comradeship with his antagonist; therefore, com-radeship between the corps was not permitted. At intervals the president of the five corps have a cold official intercourse with each other, but nothing further. For example, when the regular dueling day of the corps approaches, its president calls for volunteers from among the membership to offer battle; three or more respond-but there must not be less than three; the president lays their names before the other presidents, with the request that they furwhile it does last, and so lays up a good rest nish antagonists for these challengers from against the day that must see him put on among their corps. This is promptly done. It chanced that the present occasion was the battle day of the Red Cap Corps. They were the challengers, and certain caps of other colours had volunteered to meet them. The students fight duels in the room which I have described, two days in every week dur-ing seven and a half or eight months in every year. This custom has continued in Germany two hundred and fifty years.

To return to my narrative. A student in a white cap met us and introduced us to six or eight friends of his who also wore white caps, and while we stood conversing, two strange looking figures were led in from another room. They were students panoplied for the duel. They were bare-headed; their eyes were protected by iron goggles which projected an inch or more, the leather straps of which bound their ears flat against their heads; their necks were wound around and around with thick wrappings which a sword could not cut through; from chin to ankle they were padded thoroughly against injury; their arms were bandaged and re-bandaged, layer upon layer, until they looked like solid black logs. These weird apparitions had been handsome youths, clad in fashionable attire, fifteen minutes be-fore, but now they did not resemble any beings one ever sees unless in nightmares. They strode along, with their arms projecting straight out from their bodies; they did not hold them out themselves, but fellow atudents walked beside them and gave the needed support.

There was a rush for the vacant end of the room, now, and we followed and got good places. The combatants were placed face to face, each with several members of his own corps about him to assist; two seconds, well padded, and with swords in their hands, took near stations; a student belonging to neither of the opposing corps placed himself in a good position to umpire the combat; another student stood by with a watch and a memorandum book to keep record of the time and the number and nature of the wounds; a gray-haired surgeon was present with his lint, his bandages and his instruments. After a moment's pause the duelists saluted the umpire respectfully, then one after another the several officials stepped forward, gracefully removed their caps and saluted him also, and returned to their places. Everything was ready, now; students stood crowded together in the foreground, and others stood behind them on chairs and tables. Every face was turned toward the centre of attraction.

The combatants were watching each other with alert eyes; a perfect stillness, a going to see some wary work. But not so. The instant the word was given, the two apparitions sprang forward and began to rain blows down upon each other with such lightning rapidity that I could not quite tell whether I saw the swords or only the flashes they made in the air; the rattling din of these blows, as they struck steel or paddings was something wonderfully stirring, and they were struck with such terrific force that I could not understand why the opposing sword was not beaten down under the assault. Presently, in the midst of the aword-flashes, I saw a handful of hair skip into the air as if it had lain loose on the victim's head and a breath of wind had puffed it suddenly away.

The seconds oried 'halt!' and knocked up the combatants' swords with their own. The duelists sat down; a student-official stepped forward, examined the wounded head and touched the place with a sponge once or twice; the surgeon came and turned back the hair from the wound—and revealed a crimeon gash two or three inches long, and proceeded to bind an oval piece of leather and a bunch of lint over it; the tallykeeper stepped up and tallied one for the opposition in his book.

Then the duclists took position again; a small stream of blood was flowing down the side of the injured man's head, and over his shoulder and down his body to the floor, but he did not seem to mind this. The word was given, and they plunged at each other as tiercely as before; once more the blows rained and rattled and flashed; every few moments the quick-eyed seconds would notice that a sword was bent-then they called halt! struck up the contending weapons, and an assisting student straightened the bent one.

The wonderful turmoil went on-presently a bright spark sprung from a blade, and that blade, broken in several pieces, sent one of its fragments flying to the ceiling. A new sword was provided, and the fight proceeded. The exercise was tremendous, of course, and in time the fighters began to show great fatigue. They were allowed to rest a moment, every little while, they got other rests by wounding each other, for then they could sit down while the doctor applied the lint and bandages. The law is that the battle must continue fifteen minutes if the men can hold out, and as the pauses do not count, this duel was protracted to twenty or thirty minutes, I judged. At last it was decided that the men were too much wearied to do battle longer. They were led away drenched with crimson from head to foot. That was breathless interest reigned. I felt that I was a good fight, but it could not count morely

The state of the same of the s

minu CAUSE woun law refough their l Dur now & the w that | point was les a cigar

then in My kind o wished of plea not, b swords superio The furious once. which fell an They al forehead touch, protecti always seconds teen blo and no disable new or round t wound opponer the latt head, divided gave m consequ minute the su party h dition t injurie better !

The ' surgeor the me he coul his life, tation,

But not so. o, the two apbegan to rain r with such not quite tell attling din of ol or paddings stirring, and terrific force hy the opposwn under the midst of the of hair skip n loose on the d knocked up eir own. The fficial stepped ded head and onge once or turned back nd revealed a hes long, and ce of leather it; the tally-ne for the op-

of wind had

tion again; a ing down the and over his the floor, but . The word each other as the blows d; every few ds would no. n they called ing weapons, ghtened the u-presently de, and that sent one of ing. A new t proceeded. course, and show great o rest a mot other rests they could ied the lint t the battle the men can not count, ty or thirty vas decided aried to do y drenched That was mit, nortly because it did not last the lawful fifteen minutes (of actual fighting), and partly be-cause neither man was disabled by his wounds. It was a drawn battle, and corps-law requires that drawn battles shall be refought as soon as the adversaries are well of their hurte.

During the conflict I had talked a little, now and then, with a young gentleman of the white cap corps and he had mentioned that he was to fight next—and had also pointed out his challenger, a young man who was leaning against the opposite wall smoking a cigarette and restfully observing the duel then in progress.

My acquaintanceship with a party to the coming contest had the effect of giving me a kind of personal interest in it; I naturally wished he might win, and it was the reverse of pleasant to learn that he probably would be well as a notable with the was a notable. not, because although he was a notable swordsman, the challenger was held to be his superior.

The duel presently began and in the same furious way which had marked the previous once. I stood close by, but could not tell which blows told and which did not, they fell and vanished so like flashes of light. They all seemed to tell; the awords slways bent over the opponents' heads, from the forehead back over the crown, and seemed to touch, all the way; but it was not so-a protecting blade, invisible to me, was always interposed. At the end of ten seconds each man had struck twelve or fifteen blows, and warded off twelve or fifteen, and no harm done; then a sword became disabled, and a short rest followed whilst a new one was brought. Early in the next round the white corps' student got an ugly wound on the side of his head and gave his opponent one like it. In the third round the latter received another bad wound in the head, and the former had his under-lip divided. After that, the white corps student gave many severe wounds, but got none of consequence in return. At the end of five minutes from the beginning of the duel the surgeon stopped it; the challenging party had suffered such injuries that any addition to them might be dangerous. These injuries were a fearful spectacle, but are better left undescribed. So, against expes-tation, my acquaintance was the victor.

CHAPTER VI.

The third duel was brief and bloody. The surgeon stopped it when he saw that one of the men had received such bad wounds that he could no longer fight without endangering

The fourth duel was a tremendous encounter; but at the end of five or six minutes the surgeon interfered once more : snother man so severely hurt as to render it unsafe to add to his harms, had I watched this engagement as I had watched the others - with rapt interest and strong excitement, and with a sbrink and a shudder for every blow that laid open a cheek or a forehead; and a conscious paling of my face when I occasionally saw a wound of a vet more shocking nature inflicted. My even were upon the loser of this duel when he get his last and vanquishing wound—it was in his face and it carried away his—but no matter, I must not enter into details. I had but a glance, and then turned quickly away, but I would not have been looking at all if I had known what was coming. No, that is probably not true; one thinks he would not look if he knew what was coming, but the interest and excitement are so powerful that they would doubtless conquer all other feelings; and so under the fierce exhibitantion of the clashing steel, he would yield and look after all. Sometimes spectators of these duels faintand it does seem a very reasonable thing to Both parties to this fourth duel were badly hurt; so much so that the surgeon was at work upon them nearly or quite an hour—a fact which is suggestive. But this waiting interval was not wasted in idleness by the assembled students. It was past noon; therefore they ordered their landlord down stairs, to send up hot beef-steaks, chickens, and such things, and these they are sitting comfortably at the several tables, whilst they chatted, disputed and laughed. The door to the surgeon's room stood open meantime, but the cutting, sewing, splicing and band-aging goinfi on in there in plain view did not seem to disturb any one's appetite. went in and saw the surgeon labour a while, but could not enjoy it; it was much less try ing to see the wounds given and received than to see them mended; the stir and turmoil, and the music of the steel were wanting here—one's nerves were wrung by this grisly spectacle, whilst the duel's compensating pleasurable thrill was lacking.

Finally the doctor finished, the men who were to fight the closing battle of the day came forth. A good many dinners were not completed yet, but no matter, they could be eaten cold after the battle; therefore everybody crowded forward to see. This was not a love duel, but a 'satisfaction' affair. These two students had quarrelled, and were here to settle it. They did not belong to any of the corps, but they were furnished with weapons and armour, and permitted to ght here by the five corps as a courtesy. Evidently these two young men were unfa miliar with dueling coremonies, though they were not unfamiliar with the sword. When they were placed in position they thought it was time to begin-and they did begin, two, with a most impetuous energy, without waiting for anybody to give the word. This vastly amused the spectators, and even broke down their studied and courtly gravity and surprised them into laughter. Of course the seconds struck up the swords and started the duel overagain. At the word, the deluge of blows began, but before long the surgeon once more interfered-for the only reason which ever permits him to interfere - and the day's war was over. It was now two in the afternoon, and I had been present since half past nine in the morning. The field of battle was indeed a red one by this time; but some sawdust soon righted that. There had been one duel before I arrived. In it one of the men received many injuries, while the other one escaped without a scratch.

I had seen the heads and faces of ten youths gashed in every direction by the keen two-edged blades, and yet had not seen a victim wince, nor heard a moan, or detected any fleeting expression which confessed the sharp pain the hurts were inflicting. This was good fortitude indeed. Such endurance is to be expected in savages and prize fighters, for they are born and educated to it; but to find it in such perfection in these gently bred and kindly natured young fellows is matter for surprise. It was not merely under the excitement of the sword play that this fortitude was shown; it was shown in the surgeon's room where an uninspiring quiet reigned, and where there was no audience. The doctor's manipulations brought out neither grimaces nor moans. And in the fight it was observable that these lads backed and slashed with the same tremendons spirit, after they were covered with streaming wounds, which they had shown in the beginning. The world in general looks upon the college duels as very farcical affairs; true, but considering that the college duel is fought by boys; that the swords are real swords; and that the head and face are exposed, it seems to me that it is a farce which has quite a grave side to it. People laugh at it mainly because they think the student is so covered up with armour that he cannot be hurt. But it is not so; his eyes and ears are protected, but the rest of his face and head are bare. He can not only be badly wounded, but his life is in danger; and he would sometimes lose it but for the interference of the surgeon. It is not intended that his life shall be endangered. Fatal accidents are possible, however. For instance, the student's sword may break, and the end of it fly up behind his antagonist's ear and cut an artery which could not be reached, if the aword remained whole. This has happened, sometimes, and death has resulted on the spot. Formerly the student's armpits were not protected, and at that time the swords were pointed, whereas, they are blunt, now; so an artery in the armpit was sometimes out, and death followed. Then in the days of sharp pointed swords, a spectator was an occasional victim—the end of a broken sword flew five or ten feet and buried itself in his neck or his heart, and death ensued instantly. The student duels in Germany occasion two or three deaths every years, now, but this arises only from the carelessness of the wounded men; they est or drink imprudently, or commit excesses in the way of over-exertion; inflammation sets in and gets such a headway that it cannot be arrested. Indeed there is blood and pain and danger enough about the college duel to entitle it to a considerable degree of respect.

All the customs, all the laws, all the details, pertaining to the student duel are quaint and naive. The grave, precise, and courtly ceremony with which the thing is conducted, invests it with a sort of antique charm.

This dignity, and these knightly graces suggest the tournament, not the prize fight. The laws are as curious as they are strict. For instance, the duelist may step forward from the line he is placed upon, if he chooses, but never back of it. If he steps back of it, or even leans back, it is considered that he did it to avoid a blow or contrive an advantage; so he is dismissed from his corps in disgrace. It would seem but natural to step from under a descending aword unconsciously, and against one's will and intent-yet this unconsciousness is not allowed. Again, if under the sudden anguish of a wound the receiver of it makes a grimace, he falls some degrees in the estimation of his fellows; his corps are ashamed of him; they call him 'hare foot,' which is the German equivalent for chicken-hearted.

CHAPTER VII.

In addition to the corps laws, there are some corps usages which have the force of laws. Perhaps the president of a corps notices that one of the membership who is no longer an exempt-that is, a freshman-has remained a sophomore some little time without volunteering to fight; some day, the president, insteed of calling for volunteers, will appoint

A STATE OF THE PARTY OF THE PAR

this stude olinepulsic heard would than the oc spicuo when memb lew. ouston writte The did n dresse oame were the white witne with t not to word the su patch contri some paring of all engag cover the re cealed likes publi this 1 expo ior b very of H dent CAUSE there WOU been time heal hla rout less plen the they

in

and

a ve

effe

re possible, dent's sword y up behind ertery which rd remained etimes, and protected, Formerly ere pointed, so an artery , and death sharp point-1 occasional ord flew five his neck or antly. The sion two or w, but this imprudenty of over-nd gets such rested. Inand danger n, all the dent duel are precise, and the thing is t of antique entitle it to

ghtly graces prize fight. y are strict. tep forward pon, if he If he steps is consideror contrive from his but natural sword unwill and innot allowanguish of a grimace, ation of his d of him; the Gered.

s, there are pree of laws, rps notices to longer an remained a hont volunpresident, will appoint

Henry VI

this sophomore to measure swords with a student of another corps; he is free to decline—everybody says so—there is no compulsion. This is all true—but I have not heard of any student who did decline. He would naturally rather retire from the corps than decline, to decline, and still remain in the corps would make him unpleasantly conspicuous, and properly so, since he knew, when he joined, that his main business, as a member, would be to fight. No, there is no law against declining—except the law of custom, which is confessedly stronger than written law, everywhere.

The ten men whose duels I had witnessed did not go away when their hurts were dressed, as I had supposed they would, but came back, one after another, as soon as they were free of the surgeon, and mingled with the assemblage in, the duelling room. The white cap student who won the second fight witnessed the remaining three, and talked with us during the intermissions. He could not talk very well, because his opponent's sword had out his under lip in two, and then the surgeon had sewed it together and overlaid it with a profusion of white plaster patches; neither could be eat easily, still be contrived to accomplish a slow and troublesome luncheon while the last duel was preparing. The man who was the worst hurt of all, played chess while waiting to see this engagement A good part of his face was covered with patches and bandages, and all the rest of his head was covered and concealed by them. It is said that the student likes to appear on the street and in other public places in this kind of array, and that this predilection often keeps him out when exposure to rein or sun is a positive danger for him. Newly bandaged students are a very common spectacle in the public gardens of Heidelberg. It is also said that the student is glad to get wounds in the face, because the scars they leave will show so well there; and it is also said that these facewounds are so prized that youths have even been known to pull them apart from time to time and put red wine in them to make them heal badly and leave as ugly a scar as possible. It does not look reasonable, but it is roundly asserted and maintained, nevertheless; I am sure of one thing-scars are plenty enough in Germany among the young men, and very grim ones they are, too. They criss-cross the face in angry red welts, and are permanent and ineffaceable. Some of these scars are of a very strange and dreadful aspect; and the effect is striking when several such accent the milder ones, which form a city map on a man's face; they suggest the burned

We had often noticed that many of the students were a coloured silk band or ribbon diagonally across their breasts. It transpired that this signifies that the weare has fought three duels in which a decision was reached—duels in which he either whipped or was whipped,—for drawn battles do not count. After a student has received his ribbon, he is 'free;' he can cease from fighting, without repreach—except some one insult him; his president caunct appoint him to fight; he can volunteer if he wants to, or remain quiescent if he prefers to do so. Statistics show that he does not prefer to remain quiescent. They show that the duel has a singular fascination about it somewhere, for these free men, so far from resting upon the privilege of the badge, are always volunteering. A coros student told me it was of record that Prince Bismarck fought thirty-two of these duels in a single summer term when he was in college. So he fought twenty-nine after his badge had given him the right to retire from the field.

The statistics may be found to possess interest in several particulars. Two days in every week are devoted to dueling. The rule is rigid that there must be three duels on each of these days; there are generally more, but there cannot be fewer. There were six the day I was present; sometimes they are seven or eight. It is insisted that eight duels a week—four for each of the two days,—is too low an average to draw a calculation from, but I will reckon from that basis, preferring an under-statement to an over-statement of the case. This requires about four hundred and eighty or five hundred duelists in a year,—for in summer the college term is about three and half months, and in winter it is four months and sometimes longer. Of the seven hundred and fifty students in the university at the time I am writing of, only eighty belonged to the five corps, and it is only these corps that do the dueling; occasionally other students borrow the arms and battle ground of the five corps in order to settle a quarrel, but this does not happen every dueling day. Consequently eighty youths furnish the material for some two hundred and fifty duels a year. This average gives aix tights a year to each of the eighty. This large work could not be accomplished if the badge holders stood upon their privilege and ceased to volunteer.

*From My Diary.—Dined in a hotel a few miles up the Neckar, in a room was se walls were hung all over with framed portrait-groups of the Five Corps; some were re-ent. but many antecated photography, and were pictured in lithography—the dates ranged back to forty or fifty years ago. Newly every indivitual wore the ribbon across his beat I in one portrait group representing (as each of these pictures did) an entire Corps, I rook pains to count the ribbons; there were twenty-seven members, and twenty-one of thom wore that significant badge.

Of course where there is so much fighting, the students make it a point to keep then selves in constant practice with the foil. One often sees them, at the tables in the Castle grounds, using their whips or canes to illustrate some new sword trick which they have heard about; and between the duels, on the day whose history I have been writing, the swords were not always idle; every now and then we heard a succession of the keen hissing sounds which the sword makes when it is being put through its paces in the air, and this informed us that a student was practising. Necessarily this unceasing attention to the art develops an expert occasionally. He becomes famous in his own university, his renown spreads to other universities. He is invited to Gottingen to fight with a Gottingen expert; if he is victorious he will be invited to other colleges or those colleges will send their experts to him. Americans and Englishmen often join one or another of the five corps. A year or two ago the principal Heidelberg expert was a big Kentuckian; he was invited to the various universities and left a wake of victory behind him all about Germany; but at last a little student in Strasburg defeated him. There was formerly a student in Heidelberg who had picked up somewhere and mastered a peculiar trick of cutting up under instead of cleaving down from above. While the trick lasted he won in sixteen successive duels in his own university; but by that time observers had discovered what his charm was, and how to break it, therefore his championship ceased.

The rule which forbids social intercourse between members of different corps is strict. In the dueling house, in the parks, on the street, and everywhere that students go, caps of a colour group themselves together. If all the tables in a public garden were crowded but one, and that one had two red cap students at it and ten vacant places, the yellow caps, the blue caps, the white caps and the green caps, seeking seats, would go by that table and not seem to see it, nor

*They have to borrow the arms because they could not get them elsewhere or otherwise. At understand it, the public autnorities, all over Germany, allow the five corps to keep swords, but do not allow them to use them. This law is rigid; it is only the execution of it that is law.

seem to be aware that there was such a table The student by whose in the grounds. courtesy we had been enabled to visit the dueling place, wore the white cap—Prussian Corps. He introduced us to many white Corps. He introduced us to many white cape but to none of suother colour. The corps etiquette extended even to us, who were strangers and required us to group with the white corps only, and speak only with the white corps, while we were their guests, and keep alouf from caps of the other colors. Once I wished to examine some of the swords, but an American student said. 'It would not be quite polite; these now in the windows all have red hilts or blue; they will bring in some white hilts presently, and those you can handle freely. When a sword was broken in the first duel, I wanted a piece of it; but its hilt was the wrong colour so it was considered best and politest to await a more proper season. It was brought to me after the room was cleaved, and I will now make a 'life-size' sketch of it by tracing a line around it with my pen to show the width of the weapon. The length of the sword is about three feet, end they are quite heavy. One's disposition to oheer, during the course of the duels or at their close, was naturally strong, but corps etiquette forbade any demonstrations of this sort. However brilliant a contest or a victory might be, no sign or sound betraged that any one was moved. A dignified gravity and repression were main-

Anthropin in the first of the first

When the dueling was finished and we were ready to go, the gentlemen of the Prussian Corps to whom we had been introduced took off their cape in the courteons German way, and also shook hands; their brethren of the same order took off their caps and bowed, but without shaking hands; the gentlemen of the other corps treated us just as they would have treated white caps—they fell apart apparently unconsciously, and left us an unobstructed pathway, but did not seem to see us or know we were there. If we had gone thither the following week as guests of another corps, the white caps, without meaning any offence would have observed the etiquette of their order and ignored our presence.

[How strangely are comedy and tragedy blended in this life! I had not been home a full half hour, after witnessing those playful sham duels, when circumstances made it necessary for me to get ready immediately to assist personally at a real one—a duel with no effeminate limitations in the matter of results, but a battle to the death. An account of it, in the next chapter, will show the reader that duels between boys, for fun, and rent

N. De by cer e m Since Comba Paul the F this w lid; a presse ing for he for able re life. those taining health open-a also t French

But soon as tween Frenc follow, friends to me of the portion would his per I die the bricalm. calmine of difficant for now a across constant had be went s

He me ov on bo times, chair. began

I sa act as I said encla between men in earnest, are very dif rent affairs.]

CHAPTER VIII.

THE GREAT FRENCH DUEL.

Muchaethe modern French duel is ridiculed by certain smart people, it is in reality one of the most dangerous institutions of our day. Since it was always fought in the open air the combatants ere nearly sure to catch cold. M. Paul de Cassagnac, the most inveterate of the French duelists, has suffered so often in this way that he is at last a confirmed invalid; and the best physician in Paris has expressed the opinion that if he goes on dueling for fifteen or twenty years more—unless he forms the habit of fighting in a comfortable room where damps and draughts cannot intrude-he, will eventually endanger his This ought to moderate the talk of those people who are so stubborn in maintaining that the French duel is the most health-giving of recreations because of the open-air exercise it affords. And it ought also to moderate that foolish talk about French duelists and socialist-hated monarchs being the only people who are immortal.

But it is time to get at my subject. As soon as I heard of the late fiery outbreak between M. Gambetta and M. Fourtor in the French Assembly, I knew that trouble must follow. I knew it because a long personal friendship with M. Gambetta had revealed to me the desperate and implacable nature of the man. Vast as are his physical proportions, I knew that the thirst for revenge would penetrate to the remotest frontiers of his person.

I did not wait for him to call on me, but went at once to him. As I expected, I found the brave fellow steeped in a profound French calm. I say French calm, because French calmness and English calmness have points of difference. He was moving swiftly back and forth among the debris of his furniture, now and then staving chance fragments of it across the room with his foot; grinding a constant grist of curses through his set teeth; and halting every little wnile to deposit another han iful of hair on the pile which he had been building of it on the table.

He threw his arms around my neck, bent me over his stomach to his breast, kissed me on both cheeks, hugged me four or five times, and then placed me in his own arm-As soon as I had got well again we began business at once.

I said I supposed he would wish me to act as his second, and he said, 'Of course.' I said I must be allowed to act under a French name, so that I might be shielded from obloquy in my country, in case of fatal results. He winced here, probably at the suggestion that dueling was not regarded with respect in America. However, he agreed to my requirements. This accounts for the fact that in all the newspaper reports M. Gambetta's second was apparently a Frenchman.

First, we drew up my principal's will. I insisted upon this and stuck to my point. I said I had never heard of a man in his right mind going out to fight a duel without first making his will. He said he never heard of a man in his right mind doing anything of the kind. When he had finished the will, he wished to proceed to a choice of his last words. He wanted to know how the following words, as a dying exclamation,

'I die for my God, for my country, for freedom of speech, for progress, and the uni-versal brotherhood of man !'

I objected that this would require too lingering a death; it was a good speech for a consumptive, but not suited to the exigencies of the field of honour. We wrangled over a good many ante-mortem outbursts, but I finally got him to cut his obituary down to this, which he copied into his memorandum book, purposing to get it by heart :-

I DIE THAT FRANCE MAY LIVE.

I said that this remark seemed to lack relevancy; but he said relevancy was a matter of no consequence in last words, what you wanted was thrill.

The next thing in order was the choice of weapons. My principal said he was not feeling well, and would leave that and the other details of the proposed meeting to me, Therefore I wrote the following note and carried it to M. Fourton's friend

SIR : M. Gambetta accepts M. Fourtou's challenge, and authorizes me to propose Plessis Piquet as the place of meeting; to-morrow morning at daybreak as the time; and axes as the weapons. I am, sir, with great respect,

MARK TWAIN.

M. Fourton's friend read this note, and shuddered. Then he turned to me, and said, with a suggestion of severity in his tone :-

Have you considered, sir, what would be the inevitable result of such a meeting as,

'Well, for instance, what would it be?'

Bloodshed!

'That's about the size of it, I said. 'Now, if it is a fair question, what was your side. proposing to shed?

I had him there. He saw he had made a.

Hatamater that

uch a table

by whose to visit the Prussian any white

o ne, who group with only with ther colors.

me of the

now in the they will

ently, and

nen a sword

wanted a

rong colour

test to await

ought to me

I will now

w the width

the sword is

uite heavy.

g the course

s naturally

ade any de-

ver brilliant

no sign or moved. .. A

were main-

ed and we nen of the

been intro-

ne courteous

ands; their ok off their king hands;

treated us

white caps— ciously, and but did not

there. If

ng week as white caps, yould have rder and ig-

nd tragedy

een home a ose playful

made it no-

ediately to duel with atter of re-

An account

show the

or fun, and

A TRAMP ABROAD.

blunder, so he hastened to explain it away. He said he had spoken jestingly. Then he added that he and his principal would enjoy axes, and indeed prefer them, but such weapons were barred by the French code, and so I must change my proposal.

I walked the floor, turning the thing over in my mind, and finally it occurred to me that Gatling guns at fifteen paces would be a likely way to get a verdiet on the field of honour. So I framed this idea into a proposition

But it was not accepted. The code was in the way again. I proposed rifles; then double-barrelled shot-guns; then, Colt's navy revolvers. These being all rejected, I reflected awhile, and sarcastically suggested brick-bats at three quarters of a mile. I always hate to fool away a humorous thing on a person who has no perception of humour; and it filled me with bitterness when this man went soberly away to submit the last proposition to his principal.

He came back presently and said his principal was charmed with the idea of brick-bats at three quarters of a mile, but must decline en account of the danger to disinterested parties passing between. Then I said:— 'Well, I am at the end of my string, now.

Perhaps you would be good enough to suggest a weapon? Perhaps you have even had one in your own mind all the time?'

His countenance brightened, and he said with alacrity-

'Oh, without doubt, monsieur l'

So he fell to hunting in his pockets— pocket after pocket, and he had plenty of them—muttering all the while, 'Now, what could I have done with them?

At last he was successful. He fished out of his pocket a couple of little things which I carried to the light and ascertained to be pistols. They were single-barrelled and silver-mounted, and very dainty and pretty. I was not able to speak for emotion. I silently hung one of them on my watch chain, and returned the other. My companion in crime now unrolled a postage stamp containing several cartridges, and gave me one of them. I asked if he meant to signify by this that our men were to be allowed but one shot apiece. He replied that the French code permitted no more. I then begged him to go on and suggest a distance, for my mind was growing weak and confused under the strain which had been put upon it. He named sixty-five yards. I nearly lost my patience. I said—

'Sixty-five yards, with these instruments?
Squirt guns would be deadlier at fifty. Consider, my friend, you and I are banded to-gether to destroy life, not to make it eternal.'

But with all my persuasions, all my arguments, I was only able to get him to reduce the distance to thirty-five yards; and even this concession he made with reluctance, and said with a sigh-

特化一副助誓 等 为 1

I wish my hands of this slaughter; on ast

doc M.

por cel cha

elia bin

is M.

and 820

> obl for

the

pa

Bid ou

ea

ge

va

it 88

tr

h

th

w

th

81

your head be it.

There was nothing for me but to go home to my old lionheart and tell my humiliating story. When I entered, M. Gambetta was laying his last look of hair upon the altar. He sprang toward me, exclaiming:

You have made the fatal arrangements

His face paled a trifle, and he leaned on the table for support. He breathed thick and heavily for a moment or two, so tamultuous were his feelings; then he hoarsely whispered-

The weapon, the weapon! Quick!

what is the weapon?"

This !' and I displayed that silver-mounted thing. He cast but one glance at it, then swooned ponderously to the floor.

When he came to, he said mournfully The unnatural calm to which I have subjected myself has told upon my nerves. But away with weakness! I will confront my fate like a man and a Frenchman.'

He rose to his feet, and assumed an atti-tude which for sublimity has never been approached by man, and has seldom been approached by statues. Then he said, in his deep bass tones-

Behold, I am calm, I am ready; reveal to me the distance.

rolled him over, and poured water down his back. He presently came to, and said-

'Thirty-five yards—without a rest ? But why ask? Since murder was that man's inteution, why should he palter with small de-tails? But mark you one thing: in my fall the world shall see how the chivalry of France meets death.'

After a long silence he asked-

Was nothing said about that man's family standing up with him, as an offset to my bulk? But no matter; I would not stoop to make such a suggestion; if he is not noble enough to suggest it himself, he is welcome to this advantage, which no honourable man would take,'

He now sank into a sort of stupor of reflection, which lasted some minutes; after which he broke silence with --

The hour-what is the hour fixed for the collision?

Marin Haller

Dawn to-morrow.'

ll my argu-n to reduce ; and even reluctance.

aughter ; on to go home humiliating nbetta was a the altar. g: - 1 ngements-

he leaned e breathed or two, so , then he

! Quick!

lver-mountat it, then

irnfullyhigh I have my nerves. ili confront hmap.

ed an attinever been eldom been said, in his dy; reveal rse; but I or down his reet ? But h small dein my fall chivalry of that man's an offset to would not if he is not nself, he is ich no hon-tupor of retes; after ked for the

He seemed greatly surprised, and immediately said-

diately said—
'Insanity! I never heard of such a ing. Nobody is abroad at such an heur.' thing. Nobody is abroad as audu and it. Do you That is the reason I named it. Do you mean to say you want an audience?

'It is no time to bandy words. I am astonished that M. Fourtou should ever have agreed to so strange an innovation. Go at once and require a later hour.

I ran down stairs, threw open the front

M. Fourtou's second. He said,—
'I have the honour to say that my principal strennously objects to the hour chosen, and begs you will consent to change it to half past nine.'

'Any courtes, sir, which it is in our power to extend is at the service of your excellent principal. We agree to the proposed cellent principal.

change of time.

'I beg you to accept the thanks of my client.' Then he turned to a person behind him, and said, 'You hear M. Noir, the hour is altered to half-past nine.' Whereupon M. Noir bowed, expressed his thanks, and went away. My accomplice continued:—

'If agreeable to you, your chief surgeons and ours shall proceed to the field in the same carriage, as is customary.'

It is entirely agreeable to me, and I am obliged to you for mentioning the surgeons, for I am afraid I should not have thought of them. How many shall I want? I suppose two or three will be enough?

'Two is the customary number for each party. I refer to chief surgeons; but considering the exalted positions occupied by our clients, it will be wen and decorous that each of us appoint several consulting surgeons, from among the highest in the pro-fession. These will come in their own pri-vate carriages. Have you engaged a hearse?

Bless my stupidity, I never thought of it! I will attend to it right away. I must seem very ignorant to you; but you must try to overlook that, because I have never had any experience of such a swell duel as this before. I have had a good deal to do with duels on the Pacific coast, but I see now that they were crude affairs. A hearre,sho! we used to leave the elected lying around loose, and let anybody cord them up and cart them off that wanted to. Have you anything further to suggest?

'Nothing, except that the head under-takers shall ride together, as is usual. The aubordinates and mutes will go on foot, as is also usual. I will see you at eight o'clock in the morning, and we will then arrange the order of the procession. I have the henour to bid you a good day.'

I returned to my client, who said, 'Very well; at what hour is the engagement to be-

Half-past nine.

Very good indeed. Have you sent the fact to the newspapers?
Sir! If after our long and intimate friendship you can for a moment deem me capable of so base a treachery'— Tut, tut! What words are these, my dear friend? Have I wounded you? Ah, forgive me; I am overloading you with labour. Therefore go on with the other details, and drop this one from your list. The bloody-minded Fourtou will be sure to attend to it. Or I myself—yes, to make certain, I will drop a note to my journalistic friend, M. Noir '-

Oh, come to think, you may save your-self the trouble; that other second has informed M. Noir.

'H'm! I might have known it. It is just like that Fourtou, who always wants to make a display.

At half-past nine in the morning the procession approached the field of Plessis-Piquet in the following order: first came our carriage,—nobody in it but M. Gambetta and myself; then a carriage containing M. Fourtou and his second; then a carriage containing two poet-orators who did not believe in God, and these had MS. funeral orations projecting from their breast pockets; then a carriage containing the head surgeons and their cases of instru-ments; then eight private carriages containing consulting surgeons: then a hack containing a coroner; then the two hearses, then a carriage containing the head undertakers; then a train of assistants and mutes on foot; and after these came plodding through the fog a long procession of camp followers, police and citizens generally. It was a poble turn out, and would have made a fine display if we had had thinner weather.

There was no conversation. I spoke several times to my principal, but I judge that he was not aware of it, for he always referred to his note-book and muttered absently, 'I die that France may life.'

Arrived on the field, my fellow-second and I paced off the thirty-five yards, and then drew lots for choice of position. This latter was but) an ornamental ceremony, for all choices were alike in such weather. These preliminaries being ended, I went to my principal and asked him if he was ready. He spread himself out to his full width, and said in a stern voice, 'Ready ! Let the batteries be charged.'

The loading was done in the presence of duly constituted witnesses. We considered it best to perform this delicate service with the assistance of a lantern on account of the state of the weather. We now placed our

At this point the police noticed that the public had massed themselves together on the right and left of the field; they therefore begged a delay, while they should put these poor people in a place of safety. The request was granted.

The police having ordered the two multi-tudes to take positions behind the dueliets, we were once more ready. The weather growing still more opaque, it was agreed be-tween myself and the other second that before giving the fatal signal we should each deliver a loud whoop to enable the combatants to ascertain each other's whereabouts.

I now returned to my principal, and was distressed to observe that he had lost a good deal of his spirit. I tried my best to hearten him. I said, 'Indeed, sir, things are not as bad as they seem. Considering the character of the weapons, the limited number of shots allowed, the generous distance, the impenetrable solidity of the fog, and the added fast that one of the combatants is one-eyed and the other cross-eyed and near-sighted, it seems to me that this conflict need not necessarily be fatal. There are chances that both of you may survive. Therefore, cheer up; do not be down hearted.'

This speech had so good an effect that my principal immediately stretched forth his hand and said, 'I am mysel! again, give me the weapon.'

I flaid it all lonely and forlorn in the centre of the vast solitude of his paim. He gazed at it and shuddered. And still mournfully contemplating it, he murmured, in a broken voice,-

'Alas, it is not death I dread but mutilation.

I heartened him once more, and with such success that he presently said, 'Let the tragedy begin. Stand at my back ; do not deeert me in this solemn hour, my friend.'

I gave him my promise. I now assisted him to point his pistol toward the spot where I judged his adversary to be standing, and cautioned him to listen well and further guide himself by my fellow second's Then I was ped myself against M. whoop. Gambetta's back, Extraised a rousing 'Whoopee I' This was answered from our the far distance of the far, and I immediately shouted -

'One-two-three-fire!'

Two little sounds like spit ! spit ! broke upon my ear, and in the same instant I was crushed to the earth under a mountain of flesh. Bruised as I was, I was still able to sent to stand behind one again.

catch a faint accept from above, to this

'I die for . . . for . . . perdition take it, what is it I die for ? . . . ok, yeuit, what is it I die for ? . . . ot, yes— FRANCE! I die that France may life! The surgeons awarmed around with their probes in their hands, and applied their microscopes to the whole area of M. Gambetta's person, with the happy result of fielding nothing in the nature of a wound. Then a scene enused which was in every way gratifying and inspiring.

The two gladiators fell upon each other's necks, with floods of proud and happy tears; that other second embraced me; the sur-geons, the orators, the undertakers, the police, everybody embraced, everybody con-gratulated, everybody cried, and the whole atmosphere was filled with praise and with joy ucspeakable.

It seemed to me then that I would rather be a hero of a French duel than a crowned and sceptred monarch.

When the commotion had somewhat subsided, the body of surgeons held a consult-ation, and after a good deal of debate decided that with proper care and nursing there was reason to believe that I would survive my injuries. My internal hurts were deemed the most serious, since it was apparent that a broken rib had penetrated my left lung, and that many of my organs had been pressed out so far to one side or the other of where they belonged, that it was doubtful if they would ever learn to perform their functions in such remote and unaccustomed localities. They then set my left arm in two places, pulled my right hip into its socket again, and re-elevated my nose. I was an object of great interest, and even admiration; and many sincere and warm-hearted persons had themselves introduced to me, and said they were proud to know the only man who had been hurt in a French duel in forty years.

I was placed in an ambulance at the very head of the procession; and thus with gratifying eclat I was marched into Paris, the most conspicuous figure in that great spectacle, and deposited at the hospital.

The cross of the Legion of Honour has been conferred upon me. However, few escape that distinction.

Such is the true version of the most memorable private conflict of the age. .

I have no complaints to make against any one. I acted for myself, and I can stand the consequences. Without boasting, I think I may say I am not afraid to stand be-fore a modern French duelist, but as long as I keep in my right mind I will never con-

any ides ligh T inge WAR 57.18B doo begi two Wet Ger

to

a 81 in ( hou wer whi the elen som pitil mer tha CUD to ind sile har eig Pai Ke the the

and

dra

an I po . bu 20 ..

An

hi

W T of

CHAPTER IX.

One day we took the train and went down to Mannheim to see King Lear played in German. It was a mietake. We sat in our seats three whole hours and never understood anything but the thunder and lightning; and even that was reversed to suit German ideas, for the thunder came first and the lightning followed after.

The behaviour of the audience was per-fect. There were no rustlings, or whisper-ings, or other little disturbances; each act was listened to in silence, and the applauding was done after the ourtain was down. The doors opened at half-past four, the play began promptly at half-past five, and within two minutes afterward all who were coming were in their seats and quiet reigned. A German gentleman in the train had said that a Shakspearian play was an appreciated treat in Germany and that we should find the house filled. It was true; all the six tiers were filled, and remained so to the end,which suggested that it is not only balcony people who like Shakspeare in Germany, but those of the pit and the gallery, too. Another time, we went to Mannheim and attended a shivaree, -otherwise an opera,the one called Lohengrin. The banging and slamming and booming and crashing were something beyond belief. The racking and pitiless pain of it remains stored up in my memory alongside the memory of the time that I had my teeth fixed. There were circumstances which made it necessary for me to stay through the four hours to the end, and I stayed; but the recollection of that long, dragging, relentless season of suffering is indestructible. To have to endure it in silence and sitting still, made it all the harden I was in a railed compartment with eight or ten strangers, of the two sexes, and this compelled repression; yet at times the pain was so exquisite that I could hardly keep the tears lack. At those times, as the howlings and wailings and shrickings of the singers, and the ragings and roarings and explosions of the vast orchestra rose higher and higher, and wilder and wilder, and fiercer and fiercer, I could have cried if I had been alone. Those strangers would not have been surprised to see a man do such a thing who was being gradually skinned, but they would have marvelled at it here, and made remarks about it no doubt, whereas there was nothing in the present case which was an advantage over being skinned. There was a wait of half an hour at the end of the first act, and I could have gone out and rested during that time, but I could not trust myself to do it, for I felt that I should | in the healing balm of those gracious sounds, desert and stay out. There was another wait of half an hour toward nine o'clock, but I had gone through so much by that time that I had no spirit left, and so had no desire but to be let alone.

I do not wish to suggest that the rest of the people there were like me, for indeed they were not. Whether it was that they naturally liked that noise, or whether it was that they learned to like it by getting used to it, I did not at that time know; but they did like it—that was plain enough. While it was going on they sat and looked as rapt and grateful as cate do when one strokes their backs; and whenever the curtain fell they rose to their feet in one solid, mighty multitude, and the air was snowed thick with waving handkerchiefs, and hurricanes of applause swept the place. This was not comprehensible to me. Of course there were many people there who were not under compulsion to stay, yet the tiers were as full at the close as they had been at the beginning. This showed that the people liked it.

It was a curious sort of a play. matter of costumes and scenery it was fine and showy enough, but there was not much action. That is to say, there was not much really done, it was only talked about, and always violently. It was what one might call a narrative play. Everybody had a narrative and a grievance, and none were reasonable about it, but all in an offensive and ungovern-There was little of that sort of customary thing where the tenor and the soprano stand down by the footlights, warbling, with blended voices, and keep holding out their arms towards each other and drawing them back and apreading both hands over first one breast and then the other with a shake and a pressure—no, it was every rioter for himself, and no blending. Each sang his indicative narrative in turn, accompanied by the whole orchestra of sixty instruments, and when this had continued for some time, and one was hoping they might come to an understanding and modify the noise, a great chorus composed entirely of maniacs would suddenly break forth, and then during two minutes, and sometimes three, I lived over again all I had suffered the time the orphan . asylum burned down.

We only had one brief little season of heaven and heaven's sweet ecutacy and peace during all this long and diligent and acrimonious reproduction of the other place. This was while a gorgeous procession of people marched around and around in the third act, and sang the wedding chorus. To my untutored ear that was music—almost divine music. While my seared soul was steeped

mem. at any

to this

tion take

the their applied m.

result of

FOLY WAY

h other's

y tears;

the surzers, the

ody con-

e whole

and with

d rather

orowned

hat sub-

consult.

decided tere was ive my deemed ent that

ft lung,

n press.

other of

loubtful m their

istomed

arm in

into its ose.

ven ad-

warm-

roduced

know French

he very

h grati-

ris, the

t spec-

as been escape

atand ing, I nd belong as r cone tropper Mi

it seemed to me that I could almost re-suffer the torments which had gone before, in order to be so healed again. There is where the deep ingenuity of the operatic idea is betrayed. It deals so largely in pain that its scattered delights are prodigiously augmented by the contrasts. A pretty air in an opera is prettier there than it could be anywhere else, I suppose, just as an honest man in politics shines more than he would elsewhere.

I have since found out that there is nothing the Germans like so much as an opera. They like it, not in a mild and moderate way, but with their whole hearts. This is a legitimate result of habit and education. Our nation will like the opera, too, by and by, no doubt. One in fifty of these who attend our operas likes it already, perhaps, but I think a good many of the other forty-sine go in order to learn to like it, and the rest in order to be able to talk knowingly about it. The latter usually hum the airs while they are being sung, so that their neighbours may perceive that they have been to operas before. The funerals of these do not occur often enough. A gentle, old-maidish person and a sweet young girl of seventeen sat right in front of us that night at the Mannheim opera. These people talked, between the acts, and Landerstood them, though I understood nothing that was uttered on the distant stage. first they were guarded in their talk, but after they had heard my agent and me conversing in English they dropped their reserve and I picked up many of their little contidences; no, I mean many of her little confidences—meaning the elder party—for the young girl only listened, and gave assenting meds, but never said a word. How pretty she was, and how sweet she was! I wished she would speak. But evidently she was absorbed in her own thoughts, her own young-girl dreams, and found a dearer pleaaure in silence. But she was not dreaming sleepy dreams-no, she was awake, alive, alert, she could not sit still a moment. She was an enchanting study. Her gown was of a soft white silky stuff that clung to her round young figure like a fish's skin, and it was rippled over with the gracefullest little fringy films of lace; she had deep, tender eyes, with long, curved lashes; and she had peachy cheeks, and a dimpled chin, and such a dear little dewy rosebud of a mouth; and she was so dove-like, so pure, and so gracious, so sweet and bewitching. For long hours I did mightily wish she would speak. And at last she did; the red lips parted, and out lesped her thought-and with such a guileless and pretty enthusiasm, too;

'Auntie, I just know I've got five hundred fleas on me !'

That was probably over the average. Yes, it must have been very much over the average. The average at that time in the Grand Duchy of Baden was forty-five to a young person, (when alone,) according to the official estimate of the Home Secretary for that year ; the average for older people was shifty and indeterminable, for whenever a wholesome young girl came into the presence of her elders she immediately lowered their average and raised her own. She became a This dear young sort of contribution box. thing in the theatre had been sitting there unconsciously taking up a collection. Many a skinny old being in our neighbourhood was the happier and the restfuller for her coming.

ne happier and the restructer for his there In that rarge audience, that night, there were eight very conspicuous people. These were ladies who had their hats or bonnets on. What a blessed thing it would be if a lady could make herself conspicuous in our theatres by wearing her hat. It is not usual in Europe to allow ladies and gentle-It is not men to take bonnets, hats, overcoats, canes or umbrellas into the auditorium, but in Mannheim this rule was not enforced because the audiences were largely made up of people from a distance, and among these were always a few timid ladies who were afraid that if they had to go into an anteroom to get their things when the play was over, they would miss their train. But the great mass of those who came from a distance always ran the risk and took the chances, preferring the loss of the train to a breach of good manners and the discomfort of being unpleasantly conspicuous during a stretch of three or four hours.

CHAPTER X.

Three or four hours. That is a long time to sit in one place, whether one be conspicuous or not, yet some of Wagner's operas bang along for six whole hours on a stretch! But the people sit there and enjoy it all, and wish it would last longer. A German lady in Munich told me that a person could not like Wagner's music at first, but must go through the deliberate process of learning to like it—then he would have his sure reward; for when he had learned to like it he would hunger for it and never be able to get enough of it. She said that six hours of Wagner was by no means too much. She said that this composer had made a complets revolution in music and was burying the old masters one by one. And she said that Wagner's operas differed from all others in one notable respect, and that was that

解析法 一班 此

The second

first
I said
and fo
Wedd
noisier
if I would music
I coul
a per
the
sch fo might served Thi
head

they

here s

opera large how i him b Here that v and h tions. W me in a void of a sing !

has l

sang,

VOU I

hold is we I strait latin, not consider and once Mun once near preference preference mean pref for a

WAL

eith

prai

ha in hundred

age. Yes, the averhe Grand a young the ofy for that was shifty a whole-esence of red their became a ar young ing there hood was rooming. tht, there r bonnets d be if a us in our t is not d gentlets, canes but in reed bede up of ng these ho were ng time be con-Jagner's rs on a d enjoy ger. t a perat first. process ld have rned to ever he hat six much.

a com-

urying

he said

others

as that an ante-

play was But the distance

chances,

reach of

of being

tretch of

they were not merely spotted with musio here and there, but were all music, from the first strain to the last. This surprised me. I said I had attended one of his insurrections, and found hardly any music in it except the Wedding Chorus. She said Lohengrin was noisier than Wagner's other operas, but that if I would keep on going to see it I would find by and by that it was all music, and therefore would then enjoy it. I could have said 'But would you advise a person to deliberately practise having the toothache in the pit of his stomach for a couple of years in order that he might then come to enjoy it?' But I reserved that remark.

This lady was full of the praises of the head tenor who had performed in a Wagner opera the night before, and went on to enlarge upon his old and prodigious fame, and how many honours had been lavished upon him by the princely houses of Germany. Here was another surprise. I had attended that very opera, in the person of my agent, and had made close and accurate observations. So I said :--

Why, madam, my experience warrants me in stating that that tenor's voice is not a voice at all, but only a shrick—the shrick of a hyena.

'That is very true,' she said ; 'he cannot sing now; it is already many years that he has lost his voice, but in other times he sang, divinely : so whenever he comes now, you shall see, yes, that the theatre will not hold the people. Jawchl bei Gott! his voice is wunderschon in that past time.' I said she was discovering to me a kindly trait in the Germans which was worth emulating. I said that over the water we were not quite so generous; that with us, when a singer had lost his voice and a jumper had lost his legs, these parties ceased to draw. I said I had been to the opera in Hanover, once, and in Mannheim once and in Munich, (through my authorized agent,) once, and this large experience had nearly persuaded me that the Germans preferred singers who couldn't sing. This was not such a very extravagant speech, either, for that burly Mannheim tenor's praises had been the talk of all Heidelberg for a week before his performance took place—yet his voice was like the distressing noise which a nail makes when you acreech it across a window pane. I said so to Heidelberg friends the next day, and they said, in the calmest and simplest way, that that was very true, but that in earlier times his voice had been wonderfully fine. And the tenor in Hanover was just another example of this sort. The English speaking German gentleman wholwent with me to the operathere was brimming with enthusiasm over that tenor.

Ach Gott! a great man? You shall see him. He is so celebrate in all Germanyand he has a pension, yes, from the govern-ment. He not obliged to sing, now, only twice every year; but if he not sing twice each year they take him his pension

Very well, we went. When the renowned old tenor appeared, I got a nudge and an excited whisper:

'Now you see him !' But the 'celebrate' was an astonishing disappointment to me. If he had been behind a screen I should have supposed they were performing a surgical operation on him. I looked at my friend—to my great surprise he seemed intoxicated with pleasure, his eyes were dancing with eager delight. When the curtain at last fell, he burst into the stormiest applause, and kept it up—ae did the whole house—until the afflictive tenor had come three times before the curtain to While the glowing enthumake his bow. siast was swabbing the perspiration from his face, I said :-

'I don't mean the least harm. but really, now, do you think he can sing?

' Him ? No ! Gott im Himmel, aber, how he has been able to sing twenty-five years ago?' [Then pensively.] 'Aoh, no, now he not sing any more, he only cry. When he think he sing, now, he not sing at all. no, he only make like a cat which is un-

Where and how did we get the idea that the Germans are a stolid, phlegmatic race? In truth they are widely removed from that. They are warm-hearted, emotional, impulsive, enthusiastic, their tears come at the mildest touch. and it is not hard to move them to laughter. They are the very children of impulse. We are cold and self-contained, compared to the Germans. They hug and kiss and cry and shout and dance and sing; and where we nse one loving, petting expression they pour out a score. Their language is full of endearing diminutives; nothing that they love escapes the application of a petting diminutive-neither the house, nor the dog, nor the horse, nor the grandmother, nor any other creature, animate or inanimate.

In the theatres at Hanover, Hamburg and Mannheim, they had a wise custom. moment the curtain went up, the lights in the body of the house went down. The audience sat in the cool gloom of a deep twilight, which greatly enhanced the glowing splendours of the stage. It saved gas, too, and the people were not sweated to death. When I saw King Lear played, nobody was allowed to see a scene shifted; if there was nothing to be done but alide a forest out of the way and expose a temple beyond, one did not see that forest split itself in the middle and go shricking away, with the accompanying disenchaoting spectacle of the hands and heels of the impelling impulse—no, the curtain was always dropped for an instantone heard not the least movement behind it -but when it went up the next instant the rest was gone. Even when the stage was forest was gone. Even when the stage was being entirely re-set, one heard no noise. During the whole time that King Lear was playing, the curtain was never down two minutes at any one time. The orchestra played until the ourtain was ready to go up for the first time, then they departed for the evening. Where the stage waits never reach two minutes there is no occasion for music. I had never seen this two-minute business between acts but once before, and that was when the 'Shaughran' was played at Wallask's.

I was at a concert in Munich one night, the people were streaming in, the clock hand pointed to seven, the music struck up, and instantly all movement in the body of the house ceased—nobody was standing, or walking up the sisles or fumbling with a seat, the stream of incomers had suddenly dried up at its source. I listened undisturbed to a piece of music that was fifteen minutes long—always expecting some tardy ticketholders to come crowding past my knees, and being continuously and pleasantly disappointed—but when the last note was struck, here came the stream again. You see, they had made these late comers wait in the comfortable waiting-parlour from the time the music had begun until it was ended.

It was the first time I had ever seen this sort of criminals denied the privilege of destroying the comfort of a house full of their betters. Some of these were pretty fine birds, but no matter, they had to tarry outside in the long parlour under the inspection of a double rank of liveried footmen and waiting-maids who supported the two walls with their backs and held the wraps and traps of their masters and mistresses on their

We had no footman to hold our things, and it was not permissible to take them into the concert room; but there were some men and women to take charge of them for us. They gave us checks for them and charged a fixed price, payable in advance—five cents.

In Germany they always hear one thing at an opera which has never yet been heard in America, perhaps—I mean the closing strain dreamed the fire or actually seen it.

of a fine solo or duet. We always smash into it with an earthquake of applause. The result is that we rob ourselves of the sweetest part of the treat; we get the whisky, but we don't get the sugar in the bottom of the glass.

Our way of scattering applause along through an act seems to me to be better than the Mannheim way of saving it all up till the act is ended. I do not see how an actor can forget himself and portray hot passion before a cold still audience. I should think he wenld feel foolish. It is a pain to me to this day, to remember how that old German Lear raged and wept and howled around the stage, with never a response from that hushed house, never a single outburst till the act was ended. To me there was something unspeakably uncomfortable in the solemn dead silences that always followed this old person's tremendous outpourings of his feelings. I could not help putting myself in his place—I thought I knew how sick and flat he felt during those silences, because I remembered a case which came under my observation once, and which—but I will tell the incident:

One evening on board a Mississippi steam-boat, a boy of ten years lay asleep in a berth —a long, alim-legged boy, he was, encased in quite a short shirt; it was the first time he had ever made a trip on a steambout, and so he was troubled and scared and had gone to bed with his head filled with impending anaggings and explosions and conflagrations and sudden death. About ten o'clock some twenty ladies were sitting around the ladies saloon, quietly reading, sewing, embroidering, and so on, and among them sat a sweet, benignant old dame with round spectacles on her nose and her busy knitting-needles in her hands. Now all of a sudden, into the midst of this peaceful scene burst that slim-shark. ed boy in the brief shirt, wild-eyed, eresthaired, and shouting, 'Fire, fire! jump and run, the boat's afire and there ain't a minute to lose!' All those ladies looked sweetly up and smiled, nobody stirred, the old lady pulled her spectacles down, looked over them and said gently-

But you musn't catch cold, child. Run and put on your breast-pin, and then come and tell us all about it.

It was a cruel chill to give to a poor little devil's gushing vehemence. He was expecting to be a sort of hero—the creator of a wild panio—and here everybody sat and smiled a mocking smile, and an old woman made fun of his bugbear. I turned and crept humbly away—for I was that boy—and never even cared to discover whether I had dreamed the fire or actually seen it.

K mat the core bour which Bı Bava trici poet ter v of th pres some AD O were com and woul play the one i audie his l the p maze that threa to d charg thou

thei

again

into e Il will i The comm

Ame

that.

opera

the

and t

inter

to der flowe The trippe not to his en lightr The dways smash of applause. realves of the we get the sugar in the pplause along be better than all up till the w an actor can passion before uld think he pain to me to at old German ed around the se from that atburst till the was something n the solemn lowed this old gs of his feelg myself in his sick and flat he ause I rememr my observaall tell the inaissippi ateamleep in a berth was, encased the first time steambout, and and had gone ith impending conflagrations n o'clock some und the ladies' ng, embroiderem sat a sweet. d spectacles on g-needles in her into the midst at slim-shaukld-eyed, erectire! jump and ain't a minute looked sweetly , the old lady oked over them

l, child. Run nd then come to a poor little He was expectreator of a wild at and smiled l woman made ed and crept hat boy—and whether I had sen it.

I am told that in a German concert or opera, they hardly ever encore a song; that they hardly ever encore a song; that they may be dying to hear it again, their good breeding unually preserves them against requiring the repetition.

Kings may encore; that is quite another matter; it delights everybody to see that the king is pleased; and as to the actor encored, his pride and creatification are simply cored, his pride and gratification are simply boundless. Still, there are circumstances in

But it is better to illustrate. The King of Bavaria is a poet, and has a poet's eccentricities—with the advantage over all other poets of being able to gratify them, no matter what form they may take. He is fond of the control of of the opera, but not fond of sitting in the presence of an audience; therefore, it has sometimes occurred, in Munich, that when an opera has been concluded and the players were getting off their paint and finery, command has come to them to get their paint and finery on again. Presently the king would arrive, solitary and alone, and the players would begin at the beginning and do the entire opera over again with only that one individual in the vast solemn theatre for audience. Once he took an odd freak into his head. High up and out of sight, over the prodigious stage of the court theatre is a maze of interlacing water pipes, so pierced that in case of fire, innumerable little thread-like streams of water can be caused to descend; and in case of need, this discharge can be augmented to a pouring flood. American managers might make a note of that. The King was sole audience. The opera proceeded, it was a piece with a storm in it; the mimic thunder began to mutter, the mimic wind began to wail and sough, and the mimic rain to patter. The King's interest rose higher and higher; it developed into enthusiasm. He cried out,

'It is good, very good indeed! But I will have real rain! Turn on the water!'

The manager pleaded for a reversal of the command; said it would ruin the costly scenery and the splendid costumes, but the king oried,-

'No matter, no matter, I will have real rain! Turn on the water!'

So the real rain was turned on and began to descend in gossamer lances to the mimic flower beds and gravel walks of the stage. The richly-dressed actresses and actors tripped about singing bravely and pretending not to mind it. The King was delighted,—his enthusiasm grew higher. He cried out,— 'Bravo, bravo! More thunder! more lightning! turn on more rain!

The thunder boomed, the lightning glared, the storm-winds raged, the deluge poured down. The mimic royalty on the stage. with their scaked sating clinging to their bodies, slopped around ankle deep in water, warbling their sweetest and best, the fiddlers under the eaves of the stage sawed away for dear life, with the cold overflow sponting down the back of their necks, and the dry and happy King sat in his lofty box and wore his gloves to ribbons applauding.

'More yet!' oried the King; 'more yet, —let loose all the thunder, turn on all the water ! I will hang the man that raises an umbrella !'

When this most tremendous and effective storm that had ever been produced in any theatre was at last over, the king's appro-bation was measureless. He cried,— Magnificent, magnificent! Encore! Do it again !

But the manager succeeded in persuading him to recall the encore, and said the company would feel sufficiently rewarded and complimented in the mere fact that the en-core was desired by his Majesty, without fatiguing him with a repetition to gratify their own vanity.

During the remainder of the act the lucky performers were those whose parts required changes of dress; the others were a saked bedraggled and uncomfortable lot, but in the last degree picturosque. The stage scenery was ruined, trap-doors were so swollen that they wouldn't work for a week afterward, the fine costumes were spoiled, and no end of minor damages were done by that remarkable storm.

It was a royal idea—that storm—and royally carried out. But observe the modera. tion of the king : he did not insist upon his encore. If he had been a gladsome, unre-flecting American opera-audience, he prob-ably would have had his storm repeated and repeated until he drowned all these people,

CHAPTER XI.

The summer days passed pleasantly in Heidelberg. We had a skilful trainer, and under his instructions we were getting our legs in the right condition for the contem-plated pedestrian tours; we were well satisfied with the progress which we had made in the German language, and more than satis-fied with what we had accomplished in Art. We had had the best instructors in drawing and painting in Germany—Hammerling, Vogel, Muller, Dietz and Schuman in Hammerling taught us landscape painting, Vogel taught us figure drawing, Muller taught us to do still-life, and Dietz and Schumann gave us a finishing course in two specialties—bat-tle-pieces and shipwrecks. Whatever I am in Art I owe to these men. I have something of the manner of each and all of them; but they all said that I had also a manner of my own, and that it was conspicuous. They said there was a marked individuality about my atylo-insomuch that if I ever painted the commonest type of a dog, I should be sure to throw a something into the aspect of that dog which would keep him from being mistaken for the creation of any other artist. Secretly I wanted to believe all these kind sayings, but I could not; I was afraid that my masters' partiality for me, and pride in me, bi-ased their judgment. So I resolved to make a test. Privately, and unknown to any one, I painted my great picture, 'Heidelberg Castle Illuminated,' — my first really important work in oils,—and had it hung up in the midst of a wilderness of oil pictures in the Art Exhibition, with no name attached to it. To my great gratification it was instantly recognized as mine. All the town flocked to see it, and people even came from neighbouring localities to visit it. It made more stir than any other work in the Exhibition. But the most gratifying thing of all, was, that chance strangers passing through, who had not heard of my picture, were not only drawn to it, as by a loadstone, the moment they entered the gallery, but always took it for a 'Turner.

* See Appendix D for information concerning this fearful tongue.

Mr. Harris was graduated in Art about the same time with myself, and we took a studio together. We waited awhile for some orders; then as time began to drag a little, we concluded to make a pedestrian tour. After much consideration we determined on a trip up the shores of the beautiful Neckar to Heilbronn. Apparently nobody had ever done that. There were ruined castles on the overhanging cliffs and crags all the way; these were said to have their legends, like those on the Rhine, and what was better still, they had never been in print. There was nothing in the books about that lovely region; it had been neglected by the tourist, it was virgin soil for the literary pioneer.

Meantime the knapsacks, the rough walking suits and the atout walking shoes which we had ordered, were finished and brought to us. A Mr. X. and a young Mr. Z. had agreed to go with us. We went around one evening and bade good by a to our friends, and afterwards had a little farewell banquet at the hotel. We got to bed early, for we wanted to make an early start, so as to take advantage of the eool of the morning.

We were out of bed at break of day, feeling fresh and vigorous, and took a hearty breakfast, then plunged down through the leafy arcades of the Castle grounds, toward the town. What a glorious summer morning it was, and how the flowers did pour out their fragrance, and how the birds did sing! It was just the time for, a tramp through the woods and mountains.

We were all dressed alike : broad slouch hate, to keep the sun off; gray knapsacks; blue army shirts; blue overalls; leathern gaiters buttoned tight from knee down to ankle; high-quarter coarse shoes anugly laced. Each man had an opera glass, a can-teen, and a guide-book case alung over his shoulder, and carried an alpen-stock in one hand and a sun umbrella in the other. Around our hats were wound many folds of soft white muslin, with the ends hanging and flapping down our backs—an idea brought from the Orient, and used by tourists all over Europe. Harris carried the little watch-like machine called a 'pedometer,' whose office is to keep count of a man's steps and tell how far he has walked. Everybody stopped to admire our costumes and give us a hearty: 'Pleasant march to you!'

When we get down town I found that we

When we got down town I found that we ould go by rail to within five miles of Heilbronn. The train was just starting, so we jumped aboard and went tearing away in splendid spirits. It was agreed all around that we had done wisely, because it would be just as enjoyable to walk down the Neckar as up it, and it could not be needful to walk both ways. There were some pice to walk both ways. There were some nice German people in our compartment. I got to talking some pretty private matters pre-sently, and Harris became nervous; so he nudged me and said. -

Speak in German—these Germana may understand English.'

I did so, and it was well I did : for it turned out that there was not a German in that party who did not understand English per feetly. It is curious how wide spread our language is in Germany. After a while some of those folks got out and a German gentlemen and his two young daughters got in. I spoke in German to one of the latter several times, but without result. Finally she said:-

"Toh verstehe nur Dutch und Englische," —or words to that effect. That is, 'I don't understand any language but German and English.

English."
And sure enough, not only she but her father and sister spoke English. So after that we had all the talk we wanted; and we wanted a good deal, for they were very agreeable people. They were greatly interested in our costumes; especially the alpenstocks, for they had not seen any before.

ly level, r some f we did iguing in We r Wimpfen ont, not f and orde troll thr

They said

very lirty and lve hun ower, 11 nore the ketch of priginal to original w np better TAS none posed the in a field time. T is appare not be ma ed him so I the I compos of view; from abou

This harm Near ar three cros things, be court cost century, the excep observe t

We had garden be ing the went to b got up ab on our pa at the gat sant's ear of cabbag and draw donkey 3 alow conc before da seven.

We stu the famo fighter, G he got ou of Heilb fifty and and I occ ward the morning it out their sing! It rough the ad slouch

sapsacks;
; leathern
down to
down to e snugly
sas, a cang over his ix in one
se other.
sy folds of nging and brought urists all
the little dometer, nt of a far he t to add that we of Heiling, so we away in all around it would lown the needful some nice at. I got tters press; so he r it turnn in that lish per bread our a while German

hters got he latter Finally

glische, I don't man and but her so after

but her so after ed; and ere very
ly intere alpenbefore.

hamaning, Ca

They said that the Neckar road was perfectly level, so we must be going to Switzerland or some other rugged country; and asked us If we did not find the walking pretty faiguing in such warm weather. But we said

We reached Wimpten—I think it was Wimpten—in about three hours, and got out, not the least tired, found a good hotel and ordered beer and dinner,—then took a troll through the venerable old village. It was very picturesque and timble-down, and lirty and interesting. It had queer houses he hundred years old in it, and a military lower, 115 feet high, which had stood there more than ten centuries. I made a little sketch of it. I kept a copy, but gave the briginal was better than the copy, because it had more windows in it and the grass stood up better and had a briaker look. There was none around the tower though; I composed the grass myself, from studies I made in a field by Heidelberg in Hammerling's time. The man on top, looking at the view, is apparently too large, but I found he could not be made smaller, conveniently. I wanted him there, and I wanted him visible, so I thought out a way to manage it; I composed the picture from two points of view; the spectator is to observe the man from about where that flag is, and he must observe the tower itself from the ground. This harmonizes the seeming disorepancy.

Near an old Cathedral, under a shed, were three crosses of stone—mouldy and damaged things, bearing life-size atone figures. The two thieves were dressed in the fanciful court costumes of the middle of the sixteenth century, while the Saviour was nude, with the exception of a cloth around the loins.

We had dinner under the green trees in a garden belonging to the hotel and overlooking the Neckar; then, after a smoke, we went to bed. We had a refreshing nap, then got up about three in the afternoon and put on our panoply. As we tramped gaily out at the gate of the town, we overtook a peasant's eart, partly laden with odds and ends of cabbages and similar vegetable rubbish, and drawn by a small; oow and a smaller donkey yoked together. It was a pretty slow concern, but it got us into Heifbronn before dark—five miles, or possibly it was saven.

We stopped at the very same inn which the famons old robber, knight and rough fighter, Gotz von Berlichingen, abode in after he got out of captivity in the Square Tower of Heilbronn between three hundred and fifty and four hundred years ago. Harris and I occupied the same room which he had occupied, and the same paper had not all peeled off the walls yet. The furniture was quaint old carved stuff, fully four hundred years old, and some of the smells were over a thousand. There was a hook in the wall, which the landlord said the terrific old Gots used to hang his iron hand on when he took it off to go to bed. This room was very large—it might be called immense—and it was on the first floor; which means it was in the second storey, for in Europe the houses are so high that they do not count the first are so high that they do not count the first storey, else, they would get tired alimbing before they got to the top. The wall paper was a fiery red, with huge gold figures in it, well smirched by time, and it covered all the doors. These doors fitted so enugly and continued the figures of the paper so unbrokenly, that when they were closed one had to go faeling and searching along the had to go feeling and searching along the wall to find them. There was a stove in the corner—one of those ta'l, square, stately, white porcelain things that looks like a monument, and keeps you thinking of death when you ought to be enjoying your travels. The windows looked out on a little alley, and over that into a stable and some poultry and pig yards in the rear of some tenement houses. There were the customary two beds in the room, one in one end of it, the other in the other, about an old-fashioned brass-mounted, single-barrelled pistol-shot apart. They were fully as narrow as the usual German bed. too, and had the German bed's ineradicable habit of spilling the blankets on the floor every time you forgot yourself and went to aleep.

A round-table as large as King Arthur's stood in the centre of the room; while the waiters were getting ready to serve our dinner on it we all went out to see the renowned clock on the front of the municipal buildings.

CHAPTER XIL

The Rathhaus, or municipal building, is of the quaintest and most picturesque Middle-Age architecture. It has a massive portion and steps before it, heavily balustraded, and adorned with life-size rusty iron knights in complete armour. The clock-face on the front of the building is very large and of curious pattern. Ordinarily a gilded angel strikes the hour on a big bell with a hammer; as the striking ceases, a life-size figure of Time arises its hourglass and turns it; two golden ramsjadvance and butt each other; a gilded cock lifts its wings; but the main features are two great angels, who atand on each side of the dial with long horns at their lips; it was said that they blew melodious blasts on these horns every hour,—but they did not do it for us. We were told later that they blew only at night when the town was still.

Within the Rathbaue were a number of hage wild boars' heads, preserved, and mounted on brackets along the wall; they bore inscriptions telling who killed them, and how many hundred years ago it was done. One room in the building was devoted to the preservation of ancient archives. There they showed us no end of aged documents; some were signed by Popes, some by Tilly and other great Generals, and one was a letter written and subscribed by Gotz von Berlichingen in Heilbronn in 1519 just after his release from the Square Tower.

This fine old robber knight was a devoutly and sincerely religious man, hospitable, charitable to the poor, fearless in fight, active, enterprising, and possessed of a large and generous nature. He had in him a quality which was rare in the rough time,the quality of being able to overlook moderate injuries, and of being able to forgive and forget mortal ones as soon as he had soundly trounced the authors of them. He was prompt to take up any poor devil's quarrel and risk his neck to right him. The commou folk held him dear, and his memory is still green in ballad and tradition. He need to go on the highway and rob rich wayfarers; and other times he would swoop down from his high castle on the hills of the Neckar and capture passing cargoes of merchandize. In his memoirs he piously thanks the Giver of all Good for remembering him in his needs and delivering sundry such cargoes into his hands at times when only special providence could have relieved him. He was a doughty warrior and found a deep joy in battle. In an assault upon a stronghold in Bavaria when he was only twenty-three years old, his right hand was shot away, but he was so interested in the fight that he did not observe it for a while. He said that the iron hand which was made for him afterward, and which he wore for more than half a century, was nearly as elever a member as the fleshy one had been. I was glad to get a fac-simile of the letter written by this fine old German Robin Hood, though I was not able to read it. He was a better artist with his sword than with his pan.

We went down by the river and saw the Square Tower. It was a venerable ating ure, very strong, and very unorna-mental. There was no opining near the ground. They had to use a ladder to get into it, no doubt.

We visited the principal church, also,—a curious old structure, with a tower-like spire adorned with all sorts of grotesque images. The inner walls of the church were placarded with large mural tablets of copper, bearing engraved inscriptions celebrating the merits of old Heilbronn worthies of two or three centuries ago, and also bearing rudely painted efficies of themselves and their families tricked out in the queer coatumes of those days. The head of the family sat in the foreground, and beyond him extended a sharply receding and diminishing row of sone; facing him sat his wife, and beyond her extended a long row of diminishing daughters. The family usually large, but the perspective bad.

Then we hired the back and the horse which Gotz von Berlichingen used to use, and drove several miles into the country to visit the place called Weibertreu-Wife's Fidelity, I suppose it means. It was a fendal castle of the Middle Ages. When we reached its neighbourhood we found it was beautifully situated, but on top of a mound. or hill, round and tolerably steep, and about two hundred feet high. Therefore, as the sun was blazing hot, we did not climb up there but took the place on trust, and observed it from a distance while the horse leaned up against a fence and rested. The place has no interest except that which is lent by its legend, which is a very pretty one-to this effect :

THE LEGEND.

In the Middle Ages, a couple of young dukes, brothers, took opposite sides in one of the wars, the one fighting for the Emperor, the other against him. One of them owned the castle and village on top of the mound which I have been speaking of, and in his absence his brother came with his knights and soldiers and began a siege. It was a long and tedious business, for the people made a stubborn and faithful defence. But at last their supplies ran out and starvation began its work; more fell by hunger than by the missiles of the enemy. They by and by surrendered, and begged for charitable terms. But the beleaguring prince was so incensed against them for their long resistance that he said he would spare none but the women and children-all the nien should be put to the sword without ex-ception, and all their goods destroyed. Then the women came and fell on their knees and begged for the lives of their husbands.

'No,' said the prince, 'not a man of them shall escape alive; you yourselves, shall go with your children into houseless and friendless banishment; but that you may no this pla perty a Very and out husband furious slanght tween t No, word is When Arthur' its whit his first cravate, plates a Mr. X the win glanced grave, t waiter a he had a up the b and said 'It i turned o

Bring a off with been nev When th French wine, ac went bla the work common

Mr. 1 that the this mir thousan ported year, to custome all the might re We to het and moonlig The stre and the lamp ar turies o widene jected f as they lighted panes, and add made a

and the

irch, also,—a wer-like spire esque images. were placard. copper, bearebrating the worthies ago, and tricked out days. The eground, and receding and g him sat his long row of family was id the horse. sed to use, e country to tren-Wife's t was a feu-L " When we and it was of a mound, p, and about fore, as the imb up there nd observed se leaned up e place has lent by its one—to this ve bad.

le of young sides in one the Emperne of them top of the e with his a siege. It ness, for the ful defence. and starvaby hunger my. They begged for beleaguring em for their rould spare ren—alf the without exdestroyed. their knees husbands. an of them elves, shall to house-

ut that you

h i maitmedia.

may not starve I grant you this one grace, that each woman may bear with her from this place as much of her most valuable pro-perty as she is able to carry.

Very well, presently the gates awang open and out filed those women carrying their bushands on their shoulders. The besiegers, husbands on their shoulders. The besiegers, furious at the trick, rushed forward to slaughter the nien, but the Duke stepped between them and said :-

No, put up your swords, -a prince's word is inviolable.

When we got bask to the hotel, King Arthur's Round Table was ready for us in its white drapery, and the head waiter and his first assistant, in swallow tails and white convate, brought in the soup and the hot plates at once.

Mr. X. had ordered the dinner, and when the wine came on, he picked up a bottle, glanced at the label, and then turned to the grave, the melancholy, the sepulchral head-waiter and said it was not the sort of wine he had asked for. The head waiter picked up the bottle, cast his undertaker-eye on it and said :-

'It is true; I beg pardon.' Then he turned on his subordinate and calmly said, Bring another label.

At the same time he slid the present label off with his hand and laid it saide; it had been newly put on, its paste was still wet. When the new label came, he put it on ; our French wine being new turned in German wine, according to desire, the head waiter went blandly about his other duties, as if the working of this sort of miracle was a common and easy thing to him.

Mr. K. said he had not known before that there were people honest enough to do this miracle in public, but he was aware that thousands upon thousands of labels were imported into America from Europe every year, to enable dealers to furnish to their customers in a quiet and inexpensive way, all the different kinds of foreign wines they might require.

We took a turn round the town, after dinher, and found it fully as interesting in the moonlight as it had been in the day time. The streets were narrow and roughly paved, and there was not a sidewalk or a streetlamp anywhere. The dwellings were centuries old, and vast enough for hotels. They widened all the way up; the stories projected further and further forward and saide as they ascended, and the long rows of lighted windows, filled with little bits of panes, curtains with figured white muslin and adorned outside with boxes of flowers, made a perfect effect. The moon was bright, and the light shadow very streng; and nothing could be more picturesque than those curving streets, with their rows of huge high gables leaning far over toward each other in a friendly gossiping way, and the crowds below dult-ing through the alternating blots of gloom and mellow bars of moonlight. Nearly everybody was abroad, chatting, singing, remping, or massed in lazy comfortable attitudes in the doorways. In one place there was a public building which was fenced about with a thick, rusty chain, which sagged from post to post in a succession of low swiegs. The pavement, here, was made of heavy blocks of stone. In the glare of the moon a party of barefooted children were swinging on those chains and having a neisy good time. They were not the first ones who had done that; even their great-great-grand-fathers had not been the first to do it when they were children. The strokes of the bare feet had worn grooves inches deep in the stone flage; it had taken many gene-rations of swinging children to accomplish that, Everywhere in the town were the mould and decay that go with antiquity and evidence it; but I do not know that anything else gave us so vivid a sense of the old age of Heilbronn as those footworn grooves in the paving stones.

CHAPTER XIII.

When we got back to the hotel I wound and set the pedometer and put it in my pocket, for I was to carry it next day and keep record of the miles we made. The work which we had given the instrument to do during the day which had just closed, had not fatigued it perceptibly.

We were in bed by ten, for we wanted to be up and away on our tramp homeward with the dawn. I hung fire, but Harris went to sleep at once. I hate a man who goes to sleep at once; there is a sort of indefinable something about it which is not exactly an insult, and yet is an insolence; and one which is hard to bear, too. I lay there fretting over this injury, and trying to go to sleep; but the harder I tried, the wider awake I grew. I got to feeling very lonely in the dark, with no company but an undi-gested dinner. My mind got a start by and-by, and began to consider the beginning of every subject which has ever been thought of; but it never went further than the beginning; it was touch and go; it fled from topic to topic with a frantic speed. At the end of an hour my head was in a perfect whirl and I was dead tired, fagged out.

The fatigue was so great that it presently began to make some head against the nervous excitement; while imagining myself wide awake, I would really does into momentary unconsciousness, and come suddenly out of them with a physical jerk which nearly wrenched my joints apart—the delusion of the instant being that I was tumbling backwards over a precipice. After I had fallen over eight or nine precipices and thus found out that one-half of my brain had been asleep eight or nine times without the wide-awake, hardworking other half suspecting it, the periodical unconscieusnesses began to extend their epellgradually over more of my brain-to-rritory, and at last I sank into a drowse which grew deeper and deeper and was doubtless just on the very point of becoming a solid, blessed, dreamless stupor, when,—what was that?

My dulled faculties dragged themselves

my dulies radiates dragged themselves partly back to life and took a receptive attitudes. Now out of an immense, a limitless distance, came a something which grew and grew, and approached, and presently was recognizable as a sound—it had rather seemed to be a feeling, before. This sound was a mile away, now—perhaps it was the murmur of a storm; and now it was nearer—not a quarter of a mile away; was it the muffled rasping and grinding of distant machinery? No, it came still nearer; was it the measured tramp of a marching troop? But it came nearer still, and still nearer—and at last it was right in the wood-work. So I had held my breath all

Well, what was done could not be helped; I would go to sleep at once and make up the lost time. That was a thoughtless thought. Without intending it—hardly knowing it—I fell to listening intently to that sound, and even unconsciously counting the strokes of the mouse's nutmeg-grater. Presently I was deriving exquisite suffering from this employment, yet maybe I could have endured it if the mouse had attended ateadily to his work; but he did not do that; he stopped every now and then, and I suffered more while waiting and listening for him to begin again than I did while he was gnawing. Along at first I was mentally offering a reward of five—six—seven—ten dollars for that mouse; but toward the last I was offering rewards which were entirely beyond my means. I close-reefed my ears—that is to say, I bent the flaps of them down and furled them into five or six folds, and pressed them against the hearing-orifice—but it did no good; the faculty was so sharpened by nervous excitement that it was become a microphone and could hear through the overlays without trouble.

My anger grew to frenzy. I finally did what all persons before me have done clear back to Adam—resolved to throw something. I reached down and got my walking shoes, then sat up in bed and listened, in order to exactly locate the noise. But I couldn't do it; it was as unlocatable as a cricket's noise; and where one thinks that that is, is always the very place where it isn't. So I presently hurled a shoe at random, and with a vicious vigour. It struck the wall over Harris's head and fell down on him; I had not imagined I could throw so far. It woke Harris, and I was glad of it until I found he was not angry; then I was sorry. He soon went to sleep again, which pleased me; but straightway the mouse began again, which roused my temper once more. I did not want to wake Harris a second time, but the gnawing continued until I was compelled to throw the other shoe. This time I broke a mirror—there were two in the room—I got the largest one, of course. Harris woke again, but did not complain, and I was corrier than ever. I resolved that I would suffer all possible torture before I would disturb him a third time.

The mouse eventually retired, and by and by I was sinking to sleep, when a clock began to strike; I counted, till it was done, and was about to drowse again when another clock began; I counted; then the two great Rathhaus clock angels began to send forth soft, rich, melodious blasts from their long trumpets. I had never heard anything, that was so lovely, or weird, or mysterious—but when they got to blowing the quarter-hours, they seemed to me to be overdoing the thing. Every time I dropped off for a moment, a new noise woke me. Each time I woke I missed by coverlet, and had to reach down to the floor and get it again. At last all sleepiness forsook me. I recognized the fact that I was hopelessly and permanently wide awake. Wide awake and

At last all sleepiness forsook me. I recognized the fact that I was hopelessly and permanently wide awake. Wide awake and feverish and thirsty. When I had lain tossing there as long as I could endure it, it occurred to me that it would be a good idea to dress and go out in the great square and take a refreshing wash in the fountain, and smoke and reflect there until the remnant of the night was good.

the night was gone.

I believed I could dress in the dark without waking Harris. I had banished my shoes after the mouse, but my slippers would do for a summer night. So I rose softly, and gradually got on everything—down to one sock. I couldn't seem to get on the track of that sock, any way I could fix it. But I had to have it; so I went down on my hands and knees, with one slipper on and the other in my hand, and began to paw gently the me.

I um who flood bre bre

the

aW

dor

par of eve art

hav alw

on, I bu

tha

eve

in,

sees alw

hen

deg

tion so l

mir

for

lost.

Wh

had

wit

bee

and the cou

OXA

shr sile qui nic too age ve done clear ow something. walking shoes, ed, in order to t I couldn't do ricket's noise; t is, is always So I presently with a vicious wall over wn on him; ould throw s not angry; went to sleep t straightway ch roused my want to wake gnawing oonto throw the m—I got the woke again, as sorrier than ruffer all possirb him a third

d, and by and m s clock beit was done, when another the two great to send forth om their long nything that sterious—but the quarterbe overdoing ped off for a Each time let, and had get it again. me. I reopelessly and de awake and had lain tossdure it, it oca good idea square and untain, and dark withed my shoes s would do softly, and lown to one the track of But I had my hands n and the paw gently

e remnant of

around and rake the floor, but with no success. I enlarged my circle, and went on pawing and raking. With every pressure of my knee, how the floor creaked I and every time I chanced to rake against any article, it seemed to give out thirty-five or thirty-six times more noise than it would have done in the day time. In those cases I have done in the day time. In those cases I always stopped and held my breath; till I was, sure Harris had not awakened—then I crept along again, it I moved on and on, but I could not find the sock; I could not seem to find anything but furniture of Loudd not seem to find anything I could not seem to find anything but furniture. I could not remember that there was much furniture in the room when I went to bed, but the place was alive with it now—especially chairs — chairs everywhere—had a couple of families moved in, in the meantime? And I never could seem to glance on one of those chairs, but always stuck it full and square with my head. My temper rose, by steady and sure degrees, and as I pawed on and on, I fell to making vicious comments under my breath.

Finally, with a venomous access of irrita-tion, I said I would leave without the sock; so I rose up and made straight for the door —as I supposed—and suddenly confronted my dim spectral image in the unbroken mirror. It startled the breath out of me, for an instant; it also showed me that I was lost, and had no sort of idea where I was, When I realized this, I was so angry that I had to sit down on the floor and take hold of something to keep from lifting the roof off with an explosion of opinion. If there had been only one mirror, it might possibly have helped to locate me; but there were two, and two were as bad as a thousand; besides, these were on opposite sides of the room. could see the dim blur of the windows, but in my turned-around condition they were exactly where they ought not to be, and so they only confused me instead of helping

I started to get up, and knooked down an umbrella; it made a noise like a pistol-shot when it struck that hard, slick carpetless floor; I grated my teeth and held my breath—Harris did not stir. I set the umbrella slowly and carefully on end against the wall, but as soon as I took my hand away, its heel slipped from under it, and down it came again with another bang. I shrunk together and listened a moment in silent fury—no harm done, everything quiet. With the most painstaking care and nicety I stood the umbrella up once more, took my hand away, and down it came again.

in that lonely vast m. I do believe I should have said something then which could not be put into a Sunday School book without injuring the sale of it. If my reasoning powers had not been already aspect dry by my harassments, I would have known better than to try to set an umbrella on end on one of those glamy German flows. on end on one of those glassy German floors in the dark; it can't be, done in the day-time without four failures to one success. I thad one comfort, though—Harris was yet atill and silent—he had not stirred.

The umbrella could not locate me—there were four standing around the room, and all alike. I thought I would feel along the well and flud the door in that way. I rose up and began this operation but raked down and began this operation, but raked down a and began this operation, but raked down a picture. It was not a large one, but it made noise enough for a panorama Harris gave out no sound, but I felt that if I experimented any further with the pictures I should be sure to wake him. Better give up trying to get out. Yes, I would find King Arthur's Round Table once more—I had already found it several times—and use if for a base of departure on an exploring to to a base of departure on an exploring tour for my bed, if I could find my bed I could then find my water pitcher; I would quench my raging thirst and turn in. So I started on my hands and knees, because I could go faster that way, and with more confidence, too, and not knock down things. By and by I found the table—with my head —rubbed the bruise a little, then rose up and started, with hands abroad and fingers spread, to balance myself. I found a chair; then the wall; then another chair; then a sofa; then an alpenstock, then another sofa: this confounded me, for I had thought there was only one sofa. I hunted up the table again and took a fresh start; found some more chairs.

"It occurred to me, now, as it ought to have done before, that as the table was round, it was therefore of no value as a base to aim from; so I moved off once more, and at random among the wilderness of chairs and sofas — wandered off into unfamiliar regions, and presently knocked a candlestick off a mantel-piece; grabbed candlestick off a mantel-piece; grabbed at the candle-stick and knocked of a lamp; grabbed at the lamp and knocked off a water-pitcher with a rattling orash, and thought to myself, 'I've found you at last,—I judged I was close upon you. Harris shouted 'murder,' and 'thieves,' and finished with 'I'm absolutely drewned.'

The crash had roused the house. Mr. X.

pranced in in his long night garment, with a candle, young Z after him with another I have been strictly reared, but if it had candle; a procession awcpt in at another not been so dark and solemn and awful there door, with candles and lenterns,—landlord and two German guests in their nightgowns,

I looked around; I was at Harris's bed, a Sabbath day's journey from my own. There was only one sofa; it was against the wall; there was only one chair where a body could get at it,—I had been revolving around it like a planet, and colliding with it like a comet half the night.

I explained how I had been employing myelf and why. Then the landlord's party

Then the landlord's party self, and why. left, and the rest of us set about our preparations for breakfast, for the dawn was ready to break. I glanced furtively at my pedometer, and found I had made 47 miles. But I did not care, for I had come out for a pedestrian tour anyway.

CHAPTER XIV.

When the landlord learned that I and my agent were artists, our party rose perceptibly in his esteem; we rose still higher when he learned that we were making a pedestrian tour of Europe.

He told us all about the Heidelberg road, and which were the best places to avoid and which the best ones to tarry at; he charged me less than cost for the things I broke in the night : he put up a fine luncheon for us and added to it a quantity of great light-green plums, the pleasantest fruit in Germany; he was so anxious to do us honour that he would not allow us to walk out of Heilbronn, but called up Gotz von Berlich-ingen's horse and cab and made us ride. I made a sketch of the turn-out. It is not a Work, it is only what artists call a 'study'—a thing to make a finished picture from. This aketch has several blemishes in it; for instance, the waggon is not travel-ling as fast as the horse is. This is wrong. Again, the person trying to get out of the way is too small; he is out of perspective, as we say. The two upper lines are not the horse's back, they are the reins;—there seems to be a wheel missing—this would be corrected in a finished Work, of course. That flying out behind is not a t is a curtain. That other thing thing flying out behind is not a flag, it is a curtain. That other thing up there is the sun, but I didn't get distance it. on I do not enough remember, now, what that thing is that is in front of the man who is running, but I think This study it is a haystack or a woman. This study was exhibited in the Paris Salon of 1879, but did not take any medal; they do not give medals for studies.

We discherged the carriage at the bridge. The river was full of logs-long, slender, barkless pine logs-and we leaned on the them together into rafts. These rafts were of a shape and construction to suit the crookedness and extreme narrowness of the Neckar... They were from 50 to 100 yards long, and they gradually tapered from a 9-log breadth at their starts, to a 3-log breadth at their bow-ends. The main part of the steering is done at the bow, with a pole; the 3-log breadth there furnishes room for only the steersman, for these little logs are not larger around than an average young lady's waist. The connections of the several sections of the raft are slack and pliant, so that the raft may be readily bent into any sort of ourve required by the shape of the river.

The Neckaris in many places so narrow that a person can throw a dog across it, if he has one; when it is also sharply curved in such places, the raftsman has to do some pretty nice anug piloting to make the turns. The river is not always allowed to spread over its whole bed-which is as much as 30, and sometimes 40 yards wide—but is split into three equal bodies of water, by stone dykes which throw the main volume, depth, and current, into the central one. In low water these neat narrow edged dykes project four or five inches above the surface, like the comb of a submerged roof, but in high water they are overflowed. A hatfull of rain makes high water in the Neckar, and a basketfull produces an everflow.

wittyon and portal and and about the man are the man are the man are the part of the part

to

of bi le

I TI

I

fe

. D

t

· i

1

There are dykes abreast the SchlossHotel, and the current is violently swift at that point. I used to sit for hours in my glass cage, watching the long, narrow rafte slip along through the central channel, grazing the right-bank dyke and aiming carefully for the middle arch of the stone bridge below; I watched them in this way, and lost all this time hoping to see one of them hit the bridge pier and wreck itself sometime or other, but was always disappointed. " One was amashed there one morning, but I had just stepped into my room a moment to light my pipe, so I lost it.

While I was looking down upon the rafts that morning in Heilbronn, the dare-devil spirit of adventure came suddenly upon me, and I said to my comrades :-

I am going to Heidelberg on a raft. Will you venture with me?"

Their faces paled a little, but they assented with as good a grace as they could. Harris wanted to cable his mother—thought it his duty to do that, as he was all she had in this world—so, while he attended to this, I went down to the longest and finest raft and hailed the captain with a hearty 'Ahoy, shipmate!' which put us upon pleasant terms at once, and we entered upon business. rails of the bridge and watched the men put I said we were on a pedestrian tour to Heide rarts were note the crookness of the
to 100 yards
to 100 yards
de from a 98-leg breadth part of the na pole; the
com for only loga are not young lady's several seciant, so that
'any sort of ne river.

so narrow ross it, if he ly ourved in to do some the turns. spread over has 30, and is split into dykes depth, and a low water project four ce, like the high water rain makes a basketfull hlossHotel, vift at that in my glass regular for rafts elip nel, grazing arefully for age below; ost all this m hit the metime or red. One but I had nt to light the rafts dare-devil upon me, raft. Will they asey could.

—thought
l she had
d to this,
inest raft
y 'Ahoy, pleasant
business.
to Heidelberg, and would like to take passage with him. Let I said this partly through young Z, who spoke German very well, and partly through Mr. X, who spoke it peculiarly. I can understand figures as well as the manise that invented it, but I talk it best through an interpreter.

talk it best through an interpreter,
....The captain hitched up his trousers, then shifted his quid thoughtfully....Presently he enid just what I was expecting he would say ....that he had no license to carry passengers, and therefore was afraid the law would be after him in case the matter got noised about up any accident happened...So, I chartered the raft and the grew and took all the responsibilities on myself.

and therefore was afraid the law would be after him in case the matter got noised about or any accident happened. So I the responsibilities on myself.

With a rattling song the starboard watch bent to their work and hove the cable short, then got the 'anohor home, and our bark moved off with a stately stride, and soon was bowling along at about two knots an hours.

Our party were grouped amidships. At first the talk was a little gloomy, and ran mainly upon, the shortness of life, the uncertainty of it, the perils which beset it, and the need and wiedom of being always prepared for the worst; this shaded off into low-voiced references to the dangers of the deep, and kindred matters; but as the gray east began to redden and the mysterious solemnity and allence of the dawn to give place to the joy-songs of the birds, the talk took a cheerier tone, and our spirits began to rise steedily.

Germany, in the summer, is the perfection of the beautiful, but nobody has understood and realized, and enjoyed the utmost possibilities of this soft and peaceful beauty unless he has voyaged down the Neckar on a raft. The motion of a raft is the needful motion; it is gentle, and glidiog, and semooth, and noiseless; it calms down all feverish activities, it soothes to sleep all nervous hurry and impatience; under its restful influence all the troubles and vexations and sorrows that harass the mind vanish away; and existence becomes a dream, a charm, a deep and tranquil ecstacy. How it contrasts with hot and perspiring pedestrianism, and dusty and deafening railroad rush, and tedious jolting behind tired horses over blinding white roads I

We went slipping silently along, between the green and fragrant banks, with a sense of pressure and contentment that grew, and grew, all the time. Sometimes the banks were overhung with thick masses of willows that wholly hid the ground behind; sometimes we had noble hills on one hand, clothed densely with foliage to the tops, and on the other hand open levels blazing with poppies, or clothed in the rich be of the corn flower; sometimes we drifted the shadow of forests, and sometimes along the margin of long atretches of volvity grass, freeh and green and bright, a tireless charm to the eye, And the birds — they were everywhere; they swept back and forth across the river constantly, and their jubilant munic was never stilled.

It was a deep and satisfying pleasure to see

Int music was never stilled.

It was a deep and satisfying pleasure to see the sun create the new morning, and gradually, patiently, lovingly, dothe it on with splendour after splendour, and glory after glory, till the mirsole was complete. How different is this marvel observed from a raft from what it is when one observes it through the dingy windows of a rail way station in some wretched village while he mucohes a petrified and with and waits for the train.

CHAPTER XV.

DOWN THE RIVER.

Men and women and cattle were at work in the dewy fields by this time. The people often stepped aboard the raft, as we glided along the grassy shores, and gossiped with us and with the crew for a hundred yards or so, then stepped ashore again, refreshed by the ride,

Only the men did this; the women were too busy. The women do all kinds of work on the continent. They dig, they hoe, they peap, they sow, they bear monstrous burdens on their backs, they shove similar ones long distances on wheelbarrows, they drag the cart when there is no dog or lean cow to drag at—and when there is, they assist the dog or cow. Age is no matter—the older the woman, the stronger she is, apparently. On the farm a woman's dutles are not defined—she does a little of everything; but in the towns it is different, there she only does certain things, the men do the rest. For instance, a hotel chambermaid has nothing to do but make beds and fires in fifty or sixty rooms, bring; towels and candles, and fetch several tons of water up several fights of stairs, a hundred pounds at a time, in prodigious metal pitchers. She does not have to work more than eighteen or twenty hours a day, and she can all ways get down on her knees and sorab the floors of halls and closets when she is tired and needs a reat.

As the morning advanced and the weather grew hot, we took off our outside clothing aud ast in a row along the edge of the raft and enjoyed the scenery, with our aun umbrellas over our heads and our legs dangling n the water. Every now and then we plunged in and had a swim. Every projecting grassy cape had its joyous group of naked children, the boys to themselves and the girls to themselves, the latter usually in pare of some motherly dama, who sat in the shade of a tree, with her knitting. The little boys swam out to us, sometimes, but the little maids stood knew deep in the water and stopped their splanning end frolicking to inspect their structured a deriver and attributed by Onco we turned a corner suddenly and surprised a slender girl of twelve years or upward, just stepping into the water. She had not time to run, but she did what answered just as well; she promptly draw a fittle young willow bough athwart her white body with one hand, and then contemplated us with a simple and untroubled inversat. Thus she stood white we glided by. She was a pretty while we glided by She was a pretty creature, and she and her willow bough made creature, and she and her willow bough made to very pretty picture, and one which could not offend the modesty of the most fastidious spectator. Her, white skin had a low bank of fresh green willows for background and effective contract.— for she stood against them,—and above and out of them projected the eager faces and white shoulders of two smaller girls.

Towards now we heard the inspirition

Towards noon we heard the inspiriting

Sail ho ly He at 1 16 more add fau

Three points off the weather bow ! Three points off the weather bow ! We ran forward to see the vessel. It proved to be a steamboat —for they had begun to run a steamer up the Necker, for the first time in May. She was a tug, and one of very prouliar build and aspect. I had often watched her from the hotel, and wondered how she propelled herself, for apwondered how she propelled herself, for apparently she had no propeller or paddles. She came churning along, now, making a deal of noise of one kind and another, and aggravating it every now and then by blowing a hourse whistle. She had nine keel-boats hitched on behind and following after her in a long, slender rank. We use her in a narrow place, between dykes, and there was hardly room for us both in the cramped passage. As she tween dykes, and there was hardly room for us both in the cramped passage. As she went grinding and groaning by, we perceived the search of her moving impulse. She did not drive herself up the river, with paddles or propeller, she pulled herself by hauling on a great chain. This chain is laid in the bed of the river, and is only fastened at the two ends. It is seventy miles long. It comes in over the boat's bow, passes around a drum, and is naved out astern. She pulls a drum, and is payed out astern. She pulls on that chain, and so drags herself up the river or down it. She has neither bow nor stern, strictly speaking, for she has a long-bladed rudder on each sud and she never turns around. She uses both rulders all the time, and they are powerful enough to chable het to turn to the right or the left and steer around survey, in spite of the strong resistance of the chain. I swould not have believed that that impossible thing could be done; but I saw it done, and therefore I know that there is one impossi-ble thing which can be done. What miracle will man attempt next 1s naw gral and free

We met many big keel boats on their way up, using sails, mule power, and prefanity a tedious and laborious business. A wire rope led from the foretop many to the file of mules on the tow path a handred yards shead, and by dist of much banging and swearing and arging, the detachment of drivers managed to get a speed of two or three miles as boar out of the mules against the stiff current. The Neckar has always been used as a panal, and thus has given em-ployment to a great many men and animals; but now that this steamboat is able, with a emall orew and bushel or so of coal, to take him keel basts farther up the river in one hour than thirty men and thirty hules can do it in two, it is believed that the old-fashioned towing industry is on its death-bed. A second steamboat began work in the Necker three months after the first one was put in service.

"At noon we stepped seliore and bought some bottled beer and got some chickens cooked, while the raft waited; then we im-mediately put to see again, and had our dinner white the beer was cold and the chickens hot. There is no pleasanter place for such a meal that a raft that is "gliding" down the winding Neckar, "past 'green' meadows and wooded hills, and alumbering 'villages, and craggy heights graced with crumbling towers and battlements.

In one place we saw a nicely dressed German gentleman without any spectacles. Before I could como to anchor he had got away. It was a great pity. I so wanted to make a sketch of him. The captain com-forted me for my less, however, by saying that the man was without any doubt a fraud, who had spectacles, but kept them in his pocket in order to make himself conspicuous.

Below Hammerheim we passed Hornberg, Gotz von Berlichingen's old castle, It stands on a bold elevation 200 feet above the surface of the river; it has high vine-clad walls enclosing trees, and a peaked tower about about 75 feet high. The steep hillside, from the castle clear down to the water's edge, is terraced, and clothed thick with grape vines. This is like farming a et all mothers of part expe glou Gen they are tell. the héir in the nobl Sir chuc she Wit fath lich his d veri s bu love ed b effec

in a said

love èsca here fath four by, scie pro yet pos dest

wou

ton him deli 1 lost arr bal

she fors

She aup the 800 kne

ROF

bas a longo manuard roof. All the steeps along that part of the river which furnish the proper she never exposure, are given up to the graps. The reshough to gion is a great producer of Rhine wines. The Germans are exceedingly fond of Rhine wines; they are put up in tall, stender bottles, and ritho left ite of the would not are considered a pleasant beverage. One ble othing tells them from vivegar by the label. The Hornberg hill is to be tunnelled, and lone, an o impossio the new railway will pass under the castle. at miraole their way

A Wire

the file of

ed yards

has guige

ment" of

if two or

es against as always given em-

animale: , with a

er in one

es dan do

fashioned

he Aren

Neckar

put in bought chickens

a we im.

our din-

ohickens

or such a

lown the

ows and

gee, and

g towers

wed Ger-

les. Be-had got

anted to

in com.

eaying a fraud,

d in his picnous, ornberg,

ile. Th

bove the

ine-clad

tower

ep hilled thick

ming a

refaulty-

THE CAVE OF THE SPECTRE."

1 1 1 1 Two miles below Hornberg castle is a cave in a low cliff, which the captain of the raft said had once been occupied by a beautiful heirees of Hornberg—the Lady Gertrude—in the old times. It was seven hundred years ago. She had a number of rich and noble lovers and one poor and obscure one, Sir Wendel Lobenfeld. With the native chuckleheadeduess of the beroine of romance, she preferred the poor and obscure lover. With the native sound judgment of the father of a heroine of romance, the von Berlichlingen of that day shut his daughter up in his donjon keep, or his oubliette, or his oulverin, or some such place, and resolved that she should stay there until she selected a husband from among her rich and unble lovers. The latter visited her and percecuteffect, for her heart was true to her poor despised Ornsader, who was fighting in the Holy Land. Finally she resolved that she would endure the attentions of the rich lovers no longer; so one stormy night she escaped and went down the river and hid herself in the cave on the other side. Her father rangacked the country for her, but found not a trace of her. As the days went by, and still no tidings of her came, his conscience began to torture him, and he caused proclamation to be made that if she were yet living and would return, he would oppose her no longer; she might marry whom she would. The months dragged on, all hope forsook the old man, he coased from his oustomary pursuits and pleasures, he devoted himself to pions works, and longed for the deliverance of death.

Now just at midnight, every night, the lost he ress stood in the mouth of her cave, array ed in white cobes, and sang a little love ballad which her Orusager had made for her. She judged that if he came home alive the superstitions peasants would tell him about the ghost that sang in the cave, and that as soon as they described the ballad he would know that none but he and she knew that

As time went on, the people of the region became sorely distressed about the Spectre of the Haunted Caves : It was said that ill luck of one kind of whother always overtook any one who had the misfortune to hear that song. Eventually, every calamity the hap-pened thereaboute was laid at the deer of that music. "Consequently no boatman would consent to pass the cave at night; the peas-ante shumed the place, even in the day-

But the faithful girl sang on, night after night, month after month, and patiently waited; her reward must come at last. Five years dragged by, and still, every night as midnight, the plaintive tones floated out over the silent land, while the distant boatmen and peasants thrust their fingers into their ears and shuddered out a prayer.

And now came the Crusader home, bronz-ed and bettle scarred, but bringing a great and splendid fame to lay at the feet of his bide. The old Lord of Hornberg received him as a son, and wanted him to stay by him and be the comfort and blessing of his age; but the tale of that young girl's devotion to him and its pathetic consequences, made a changed man of the knight. He could not enjoy his well-carned rest. He said his heart was broken, he would give the remnant of his life to high deeds in the cause of humanity, and so flud a worthy death and a blessed reunion with the brave, true heart whose love had more honoured him than all his victories in war.

When the people heard this resolve of his, they came and told him there was a pitiless dragon in human disguise in the Haunted Cave, a dread creature which no knight had vet been bold enough to face, and begged him to rid the land of its desolating presence. He said he would do it. They told him about the song, and when he saked what song it was, they said the memory of it was gone, for nobody had been hardy enough to listen to it for the past four years and more.

Towards midnight the Crusader came floating down the river in a boat, with his trusty cross-bow in his hands. He drifted silently through the dim reflections of the crage and trees, with his intent eyes fixed upon the low cliff which he was approaching. As he drew near he discerned the black m with of the cave. Now, -is that a white tigure? "Yes. The plaintive song begins to well forth and float away over meadow and river-the cross-bow is slowly raised to position, a steady aim is taken, the bolt flies straight to the mark—the figure sinks down, song, therefore he would enspect that the still singing, the knight takes the wool out was alive, and would come and find her. too late for Ah. if he had only not put the wool in his care ! de !

The Crusader went away to the wars again, and presently fell in battle, fighting for the Oross, . Tradition says that during several centuries the spirit of the unfortanate girl saug nightly from the cave at milnight, but the music carried no curse with it; and although many distance for the mysterious sounds, few were favoured, since only those could hear them who had never failed in a trust. It is abelieved that the singing still continues, but it is known that nebody has heard it during the present century. Street .

CHAPTER XVL

AN ANCIENT LEGEND OF THE BHINE.

The last legand reminds one of the "Lorelei"—a legend of the Rhine. There is a song called "The Lorelet."

Germany is rich in folk-songs, and the words and airs of several of them are peculiarly beautiful,—hut "The Lordei" is the people's favorite. I could not endure it at first, but by and by it began to take hold of me. and now there is no tune which I like so well.

It is not possible that it is much known in America, else I should have heard it there. The fact that I never heard it there, is cviwho have fared likewise; therefore, for the sake of these, I mean to print the words and the music in this chapter. And I will refresh the reader's memory by printing the legend of the Lirelei too. I have it by me regend of the Lorelettoo. I have it by me in the "Legends of the Rhine," done into English by the wildly gifted Garnham, Bache lor of Arts. I print the legend partly to refresh my own memory, too, for I have never read it before:

THE LYGENDY " ( . . . . . . . . .

Lore, (two syllables,) was a water nymph who used to sit on a high rock called Ley or Lei, (prononneed like our word lie) in the Rhine, and lure beatmen to destruction in a furious rapid which marred the channel at that spot. She so bewitched them with her plaintive songs and her wooderful beauty that they forgot everything electo gaze up at her, and so they presently drifted among the

In those old, old times, the count Bruno lived in a great castle near there with his son the count Hermann, a youth of twenty. Hermann had heard a great deal about the heantiful Lore, and had finally fallen very deeply in love with her without having yet seen her. So he used to wander to the neighbourhood of the Let, evenings, with his aither and Express his Lenging in Low Singing," as Garnham says. On one of these occasions, excludenty there hovered around the top of the rock a brightness of unequalied olearness and polone, which, in increasingly amaller siroles thickened, was the enchanting figure of the beautiful Lore. An mintentional cry of joy escaped the youth, he let his ather fell, and with ex-tended arms he called out the name of the enigmatical Being, who seemed to strop lav-ingly to him and becken to him in a friendly manuer; indeed, if his ear did not deceive him, she called his name with unufterable sweet whispers, proper to love. Beside himself with delight, the youth lost his senses and sank conseless to the earth.

After that he was a changed person. He went dreaming about, thinking only of his fairy and caring for maught else in the world. The old count saw with affliction this changement in his son, whose cause he could not divine, and tried to divert his mind into cheerful channels, but to no purpose. Then the old outus used anthority. He commanded the youth to betake himself to the camp. Obedience was promised. Garuham asya : 13 off 'It was on the evening before his departure, as he wished still once to visit the Lei and offer to the Nymph of the Rhine, his sight, the tones of his sither, and his songs. He went, in his boat, this time accompanied by a faithful squire, down the stream. moon shed her silvery light over the whole country ; the steep bank mountains appeared in the most fentastical shapes, and the high oaks on either side bowed their branches on Hermann's passing. As soon as heapproached the Lei, and was aware of the surf-waves, his attendant was seized with an inexpressible anxiety and he begged permission to land; but the knight swept the strings of his guitar and sang : with I was hims gill

44 - 1

44

"Once I saw thee in dark night."
In sup-tractural beauty bright:
If incli-rays, was the figure wove,
I'v share its light, locked-hair strove,

Thy garment colour wave-dove, By thy hand the eign of love. Thy eyes awest enchantment, kaying to me, on I currencement.

"O, wert thou but my aweetheart, How willin ly thy love to part I With d light I should be bound." To thy rooky hease in deep ground."

That Hermann should have gone to that place at all, was not wise; that he should have gone with such a song as that in his mouth was a most serious, mistake. The Lorelei did not 'call his name in unutterable

e, with his ng in Low Oa, one of re hovered rightness of a which, in kened, was utiful Lore, escaped the id with exame of the stoop lovation in a friendly not deceive unutterable Beside him this senses

erson. He only of his
a the world.
Biction this use he could
a mind juto cose. Then
He comneel to the Garuham

his deparisit the Lei Rhine his
I his songa ecompanied ream. The r the whole
ms appeared
d the high ranches on approached waves, his expressible
n to land;
ings of his

ne to that he should hat in his ske. The autterable

OVE SAIN

ri le inf

ewest whispers this time. No, that song naturally worked an instant and thorough changement in her; and not only that, but it stirred the bowels of the whole afflicted region round about there—for—

'Searcely had these tones sounded, everywhere there began armult and sound, as if voices above and below the water. On the Lei rose fiames, the fairy stood above, as that time, and beckened with her right hand clearly and argently to the infatuated Knight, while with a staff in her left she called the waves to her service. They began to mount heaven ward; the boat was upset, mocking every exertion; the boat was upset, the gunwale, and splitting on the hard atones, the hoat broke, into pieces. The youth sauk into the depths, but the squire was thrown on above by a powerful wave.'

was thrown en shore by, a powerful wave.'

The bitterest things have been said shout the Larelci during many centuries, but surely her conduct upon this cocasion entitles her to our respect. One feels drawn tenderly towards her and is moved to forget her many rimes, and remember only the good deed, that growned and closed her excess and see her had been been some the conduction of the co

The Fairy was never more seen; but her enchanting tones have often been heard. In the beautiful, refreshing, still nights, of expring, when the moon pours her silver light over the country, the listening shipper hears from the rushing of the waves, the cuhoing clain of the wonderfully charming woods, which sings a song from the crystal castle, and with sorrow and fetr he thinks on the young Count Hermann, seduced by the Nymph."

Here is the music, and the German words by Reinrich Heine. This song has been a favourite in German for forty years, and will remain a favourite always, maybe:

I have a prejudice against people who print things in a foreign language and add no translation. When I am the reader, and the author considers me able to do the translating myself, he pays me quite a nice compliment—but if he would do the translating for me I would try to get along without the compliment.

If I were at home, no doubt I could get a translation of this poem, but I am abroad and oan't; therefore I will make a translation myself. It may not be a good one, for poetry is out of my line; but it will serve my purpose—which is, to give the un-German young girl a jingle of words to hang the tune on nutil she can get hold of, a good version, made by some one who is a poet and know how to convey a poetical thought from one language to another.

BY THE LORKLEL (6.16) of 7

I cannot divise what it meanth.
This hundred name pain:
A tale of the bygone ages
Kibps beopling through my brain;

The faint at cools in the cleaming, And praceful flows the Bhina.
The thirsty summits are disking.
The sunset's fleeding wine;

The loveliest malden is staffing the fight through in you blue air, and feel Her golden jewels are shintaged in the combs her golden hair.

She combe with a comb shap is golden,
And sings a well-d refusia.
That steeps in a de-dly enchantment.
The list ner's raylahed brain:

The deemed in his drifting hallon, is tranced with the sad awest one.

Be sees not the yawning breakers.

He sees but the maid alone:

The philes billows engulf him 1 doing So perish railor and bark;
And this, with her beleful elinging, in its the Lorele's growsome work.

I have a translation by Garnham, Bobelor of Arts; in the 'Legends of the Rhuse,' but it would not answer the purpose I mentioned above, because the measure is too nobly irregular; it don't fit the tune anugly enough; in places it hange over at the ends two far, and in other places it runs out of words before he get to the end of the bar-Still, Garsham's translation has high merits, and I am not dreaming of leaving, it out of my book. I believe this poet is wholly unknown in America, and England; Litake poeuliar pleasure in bringing him forward, because I consider that I discovered him;

out oil ve fremments ma une.

TRANSLATED BY L. W. GARNHAM, B. A.

tont I do not know what it signifies.

That I am so sprowful I

A fable of old Thues a terrifies,

I loaves my reset so thoughtful.

The sir is cool and it darkens,
And calmly flows the Ithine's

And calmly flows the Ithine's

In evening succession line:

The most beau iful maiden entrances bove wonderfully there,
Her beautful golden astire glances,
Ene combener golden hair.

With golden comb so lustrous,
And thereby a one sings,
It has a tone so wendrous,
That powerful melosy, sings, only way

The sh p or in the little : Lip
It esteats with wose same inht;
He does not see the rock of p
He only regards dreaded height.

I believe the turbulent waves Swallow at last shipper and boat; Sho with her singing craves, to me. All to visit her magic most.

No translation could be closer. He has got in all the facts; and in their regular order too. There is not a statistic wanting. It is as succinct as an invoice. That is what a reaction ought to be; it should exactly reflect the thought of the original. You can't sing, 'Above wonderfully there,' because it simply won't go to the tune,' without damaging the singer; but it is a most olingingly exact translation of Dort oben wunderbar—fits it like a blister. Mr. Garn-wunderbar - he is the state.

ham's reproduction has other merits—a hundred of them—but it is not necessary to point them out. They will be detected.

No one with a specialty can know to have a monopoly of it. Even Garnham has a rival, Mr. X. had a small pamphlet with him which he had bought white on a visit to Munioh. It was entitled a 'A Catalogue of Pictures, in the Old Pinacotek, and was written in a peculiar kind of English. Here are the extracts ? ''d

"It is not permitted to make use of the work in question to a publication of the same contents as well as to the pirated edition of 12 110 1 15.343

An evening landscape. In the foreground near a pond and a group of white beeches is leading a footpath animated by travellers ! * A learned man in a cynical and torn dress holding an open book in his hand. I have "St. Bartholomew and the Executioner with the knife to fulfil the martyr. award this picture was thought anto be Bindi Altoviti's portrait, now somebody will again have it to be the self-portrait of Raphael.

Susan bathing, surprised by the two old man. In the background the lapidation of the condemned.'

( Lapidation, is good you is it much more elegant than 'atoning.') St. B. chua sitting in the landscape with an angel who looks at his plague-sore, whilst the dog the bread in his mouth attests him.' Spring The Guddess Flora, sitting.

Behind her a fertile valley perfused by a

A beautiful bouquet suimated by Maybugn, etc.

A warrior in armour with a gypsyous pipe in his hand leans against a table and blows the smoke far away of himself."

A Dutch landscape along a navigable river which perfuses it till to the background.

Some peasants singing in a cottage, woman lets drink a child out of a cupit

St. John's head as a boy painted in fresco on a brick (Meaning a tile) 'A young man of the Ricgio family, his hair out off right at the end, dressed in black hair out off right at the end, drowed by orans with the same cap. Attributed to Raphael, but the signation is false.

The Virgin holding the injunt. Is very painted in the manner of Savsoferrato.

A larder with greens and dead game spinated by a cook-maid and two kitches-

However, the English of this datalogue is at least as happy at that which distributishes an inscription upon a certain picture in Rome—to wit

Revelations View. St. John in Patterson's Island.

But meantime the raft is moving on.

BIGH SUPPOCHAPTER XVIL BERRY

A mile or two above Eberbach we saw a peculiar rain projecting above the foliage which clothed the peak of a high and very steep hill. This rain consisted of merely a couple of crambling masses of masonry which bore a rude resemblance to human faces; they leaned forward and touched foreheads, wiid had the took of being abserbed in conversa-tion. This rain had nothing very imposing or pleturesque about it, and thered we no great dealing it; yet it was called then Spec-tacting Baimsements and retinues out in vo.

LEGEND OF THE SPECTAGULAR RUIN.

The captain of the raft, who was as full of history as he could stick, said that in the Middle Ages a most prodigious; fire-breathing dragon used to live in that region, and made more trouble than a tax quilector. Ho made more trouble than a tar collector. He was as long as a railway train, and had the customary impenetrable green scales all over him. His breath bred pestilence and conflagration, and his appetite bred famine. He ate men and cattle impartially, and was exceedingly unpopular. The German emperor of that day made the usual offer: he would grant to the destroyer of the dragon, any one solitary thing he might ask for; for he had a surplusage of daughters, and it was "one to be destroyer of the dragon," and the dragon, and a surplusage of daughters, and it was "oustomary for dragon-killers to take a daughter

So the most renowned knights came from the four corners of the earth and re-tired down the dragon's throat one after the other. A panic arose and spread Heroes grew cantious. The procession. ceased. The dragon became more destructive than ever. The people lost all hope of succour, and fled to the mountains for refuge.

Sac. oper pimi still chat and an't man B the latie thou léas scur

do b

iect

rage

wou drag the dea men in t the tho said

adv

, i 8 i P on. bre atri ( kni Wal kiti off

he dra mo lab

mo pet pr

mi URY er

painted in family, his cit in black o Raphael,

ATT VOLY ato. game sui-kitchenatalogue is picture in

in Patter. g on things

Yellett. sels agree

The be We saw a he foliage ve y steep y = couple bich bora es; they conversaimposing od was no ant Spec-70 1 7 117 เยื่อ เกาะรู้ใ DIN. Lin as full of at in the g-breathgior, and had the all over end conice. He emperor e would on, any or be had oueto-

no from and reie nfter spread estruct. inpe of for re-

At last Sir Wissenschaft, a poor and obscure knight; out of a fer country, arrived to do battle with the monsten . A pitiable object he was, with his armour hanging in rage about him, and his strange shaped knap-simply enquired if the emporor's offer was still in force. The emperor said it was but obaritably advised him to go and bunt haves and not endanger se precious a life as his in an attempt which has brought death to so many of the world's most illustrious heroes.

But this tramp only asked - Were any of these heroes men of science the This raised a laigh, of course, for science was despised, in those days. But the tramp was not in the least ruffled. He said he might be a little in advance of his age, but no matter science would come to be honoured, same time, or other. He said he would march against the dragon in the morning of Out of compassion, then, a decent epear was effered him, but he declined and said, speaks were useless to men of adlence. They allowed him to sup in the vervants hall, and gave him a bed in the stables, when as my and and man agond? thousand were gathered to see. The emperor uniformi edica u 181. Do not be rask, take a spear, and leave off your knapsack.

It is not a knapeack, and moved straight

The dragon was waiting and ready. He was breathing forth vast volumes, of sulphurous amoke and lurid blasts of flame. The ragged knight strode warily to a good position, then he unsung his cylinatical knapsack—which was simply the common fire-extinguisher known to modern times—and the first chance he got he turned on his hose and shot the dragon square in the centre of his cavernous mouth. Out went the fire in an instant and the dragen curled up and died.

This man had brought brains to his aid He had reared dragons from the egg., in his laboratory, he had watched over them like a mother, and patiently studied them and experimented upon them while they grew. Thus he had found out that fire was the life principle of a dragon; put out the dragon's fire and it could make steam no longer, and must die. He could not put out as fire with a spear, therefold he invented the extinguisher. The dragon being dead, the emperor fell on the hero's neck and said—Deliverer, name your request, at the same time beckoning out behind with his veci for a detachment of his daughters to and a half or fou the street with form and advance. But the tramp gave them no observance. He simply said—

My request is that upon me be conferred the monopoly of the manufacture and sale of spectroles in Germany.

The emperor sprang saids and exclaimed.

This trascends all the impudence I aver heard A modest demand, by my halidome! Why didn't you ask for the imperial revenues at once, and be done with

But the monarch had given his word, and he kept it. To everybody's surprise the unselfish monopolist immediately reduced the price of spectacles to such a degree that the price of spectacles to such a degree that a great and ordshing burden was removed from the nation. The emperor, do commended the second of the emperor and to testify his appreciation of it, fixued a degree commanding everybody to buy this to factor's spectacles, and wear them, whether they needed them or not.

So originated the wide-spread custom of wearing spectacles in Germany; and as a custom once established in these old lands is imperishable, this one remains universal in the Empire to this day. "Such is the legend of the monopolist's once stately and samptuous eastle, now called the Spect cular Ruin.

On the right bank, two or three miles below the Spectacular Ruth, We pussed by a noble pile of castellated buildings overlooking the water from the creat of a lofty elevation. A stretch of two hundred yards of the tion. A stretch of two hundred yards of the high front wall was heavily draped with lvy, and out of the mass of buildings within rose three pictures one old towers. The place was in fine order, and was inhabited by a family of princely rank. This eastle had its legend, too, but I should not feel justified in repeating it because I doubted the truth of some of its minor details.

Along in this region a multitude of Italian labourers were blasting away the frontage of the hills to make room for the new railwoy. They were filty or a hundred feet above the river. As we turned a sharp corner they be-gan to wave signals and short warnings to us to look out for the explosions. It was all very well to warn us, but what could we do? You can't back a fast up stream, you can't hurry it down stream, you can't scatter out to one side when you haven't any room to speak of, you won't take to the perpendicular cliffs on the other shore when shey appear to be blasting there too. Your resources are limited, you see. There is simply nothing for it but to watch and pray.

For some hours we had been making three and a half or fou still making that We had been dancing right along until these men began to shout'; then for the next ten minutes it seemed to me that I had never seen a raft to so slowly. When the first black went off we raised our sun-numbrellas and waited for the rabult. No harm done nope of the stones fell in the water. Another blast followed. and another and another. Some of the rabbish fell in the water just eatern of us. We ran that whole battery of nine blasts in a row, and it was certainly one of the most exciting and uncomfortable weeks I ever apent, either aship or ashore. Of course we frequently manned the poles and shoved carnessly for a second or so, but every time one of shore, spurts of dust and debris shot alofs t every man dropped his pole and looked up to get the bearings of his where of it. "It was very busy times along there for a while. It appeared certain that we must perish, but even that was not the bitterest thought; so, the abjectly unheroic nature of the death—that was the sting .... that and the bizarre wording of the resulting oblinary: Shot with a rock on a rafe, There would be no poetry written about it. Noue could be written about it. Example 4 Times energy to the hotel to hot, with a rock, on a rate.

No poet who walued his seputation would touch such a them, so that, I should be distinguished as the only distinguished dead who went down to the grave unsonneted, in 1878. But we escaped, and I have never regretted it. The last blast was a peopliarly strong one, and after the small rubbish was done raining around us and we are just going to shake hands over our deliverance, a later and larger stone came dewn amongst our little group of pedestrians and wrecked an umbrella. It did no other harm, but we took to the water just the same,

It seems that the heavy work in the quarries and the new railway gradings is done mainly by Italians. That was a revelation. We have the notion in our country that Italians never do heavy work at all, but confine themselves to the lighter, arts, like of an grinding, operatio singing, and assassination. We have blundered, that is plain.

an All along the river, near every village, we saw little station houses for the future vailway .... They were finished and waiting for the rails and business. They were at trim and anway and pretty as they could be. They was always of brick or atone; they were of graceful shape, they had vines and flowers about them already, and around them the grass was bright and green, and showed that it was carefully looked after. They were a They were a let the men know, or there will be a panic decoration to the beautiful landecape, not an offence. Wherever one saw a pile of gravel. or a vile of breken stone, it was always repred as trimly and exactly as a new grave or a stack of cannon balls; nothing about those stations, or along the railroad or the waggon road was allowed to look shabby as look unornamental," a The keeping in comptry in such beautiful order as Germany exhibits, has a wise practical side of it, too, for it keeps thousands of people in work and bread who would otherwise be idle and misobioyeus.

As the night shot down, the orptain want ed to tie up, but I thought may be we might make Hirchhorn, so we went on. Presently the sky became overcast, and the captain came aft blooking ouneasy. 11100 Ho a cast his 'eye sloft," then schook his head, and said it was coming on a to blower therefore wanted to go on on The captain said we ought to shorten sail anyway, out of common prudence. Consequently the larboard watch was ordered to lay in his pole. It grew quite dark now, and the wind began to specific it wailed through the awaying branches of the trees, and swept our decks in fitful guets. Things were taking on an ugly look; ... The captain shouted to the steersman on the forward log the cost of bereating since busewed!

How's she heading?

The answer came faint and hoarse from far forward : र्शिक्षाम्बर्धिक Nor east and by nor and some sail.

Let her go off to a point.

Ay aye, siritar aitinu ann pagara ad't

What water have you got had you days Shoal, sir. Two feat large on the starboard, and two and a half on the larboard.'

Let her go off another point, see new get

Ay-aye, sir.' to mines edt Manus ean i Forward, men, all of you harvely, mon il Stand by to crowd her round the weather ใก เกิด เกิดเกิดเกิดเลื่องเลือนเลือนเลือน Ay-aye, sir, til als Jarm sact

Then followed a wild running and trampling and house shouting, but the forms of the men were lost in the darkness, and the sounds were distorted and confused, by, the roaring of the wind through the thingle bundies. By this time the sea was seminary inches high, and threatching every moment to engulf the frail, bark, Now came, the mate hurrying aft, and said close, to the captain's ear, in a low, sgitated voice -

Prepara for the worst, air-we, have sprung a leak Pop att stagard, 118

Heavens I'where thom a man out no hal

Right att the second row of logs, it Nothing but a miracle can save us ! Don't al e t you t pi ril. for to Do cloth such forw

and

by to

are e . N 1 ATh Hall Lot ! 96°6 B

Barle V 19 W and desi ory, agrou Bu glad

·I

4110 8 asho Pass. Th weet rain said the 1 to m stop. that fami

H. & S from W resol vote to th . # W this mile

Tave just inos terra T affin. not bed

ter, aupt OUIS sul ]

titful guets. ook The on the forr bussiodt rse from far by-east, on eral. The size

m the starlarboard. he inv an voly, now ! be weather pri magari and trampo forms of e, and the ed, by the ingle buna crupaing y moment came the so, to the d roice --we, baye

E . 1 . 1 . 1 . 1 . 1 . 1 us ! Don't be a panio 艫

and mutiny! Lay her in shore and stand by to jumo with the aterpline the moment you to second my endeavours in this hour of piril. You have hats -go forward and ball for your lives !'

Down swept snother mighty blast of wind, clothed in spray and thick darkness. At such a moment as this came from away forward that most appalling of all ories that are ever heard at sea; "Yest to the man !

Man overboard parties a facel them and '
The captain shoulded the man!

Hard a port ! " Never mind the man! Lut him climb aboard or wade ashore!"

Another bry came down the wind.

Breakers ahe of the state of the same winds.

Where away the grant of the port fore-foot."

We had groped our slippery way forward, and were now bailing with the frency of depair, when we heard the mate's terrified ory. from far aft. cry, from far aft, sand a hall son son stall be Stop that dashed bailing, or we shall be aground 1 1745

But this was immediately followed by the

ashere and take a turn around a tree and

The next moment we were all on shore weeping and embracing for juy, while the rain poured down in torrents. The captain said he had been a mariner for forty years on the Neckar, and in that time had been storms to make a man's cheek blanch and his pulses stop, but he had never, never seen a storm that even approached this one. How familiar that sounded! For I have been at a good deal and have heard that remark from captains with a frequency accordingly.

We framed in our minds the usual resolution of thanks and admiration and gratitude, and took the first opportunity to vote it, and put it in writing and present it to the captain, with the customary speech." We tramped through the darkiess and the drenching "summer rain" full three Tavern "hour before midnight, "al-inost exhausted from hardship, farigue and terror. I can never forget that bight worth

The landlord was rich, and therefore could afford to be crusty and "disobliging;" he did not at all like being ferred out of his warm bed to open his house for us. But no mat-ter, his household got up and cooked a quick supper for us, and we brewed a hot purch for smoke wille we fought the naval battle over again and voted the resolutions; then we retired to exceedingly nest and pretty chambein up stairs that had deen, comfortable beds in them with heir loom piling cases most elaborately and tastefully embroidered most elaborately and castering, construction by hand, but how now we would be an important to Such rooms and back and ambuildered lines are as Trequent in German village into a diperior to German village in more important of German village in more important of German village in more important of German village in more important excellenties, conveniente con and privileges that I on a commercial but the betals add not belong in the list translation of the meaningless name i for all the balleand all thems were third with farge glass cases which where it led with all theta of birds and animals, glass eyed, ably buffed, and set up in the most satural and elequent and dramatic attitudes. The mosts we were about the rain cleared away and the moon dame out, I dead off to alerp white contempla ing a white stuffed sowl which was looking intently down com me from a high perch with the air of a person who thought he had met me before but locald nos make out fur certain reduced II in the last make out fur certain reduced II in the last make all the way single of an early. He said that as he was ninking deliciously to sleep, the moon lifted away the shadows and described as he was single shadows and developed a huge cat, on a bracket, dead muscle tenso, for a spring, and with its glittering glass over a med straight a thim. It made Z anomfortable, the nied closing his lown eyes, but that did said canswer, for a natural instinct a kept making him open them again to see if the out was still getting ready to faunch at him which she salways was Hell tried turning his back, but that was a failure; he know the shiften eyes were on him still. So at last he had to get up, after an hour or two of weiry and experiment, and set the cat out in the hall of 80 he won, that time out one #### of a selent CHAPTER XVHL of party of

are warren grave and beauty quarely guine In the morning we took breakfast in the garden, under the trees, in the delightful German summer fashion. The air was filled with the fragrance of flowers and wild animals; the living portion of the menageric of the "Naturalist Tavern!" was all about us. There were great onger populous with flut-tering and schattering foreign birds, and other great cages and greater wire; pent, populous with quadrapeds, both native and foreign. There were some free creatures, too, and quite somable ones they were. White ourselves, to keep off consumption. After rabbits webt loping about the place, and ocshins; a fawn, with a red ribbon on its neck, walked up and examined us fearlessly; rare breeds of chickens, and doves bagged for crumbs, and a poor old tailess raven lhopped about with a humble; akame faced mien which said. Please do not notice my expoure—think how you would feel in my circumstances, and be charitable. If the was observed too much, he would retire behind something and stay there, until he judged the party's interest had found another object. I never have seen another dumb creature that was see snothidly geneitive. Bayard Taylor, who could interpret the dumb rea-sonings of animals, and understood their moral matures better whan most, men, would have found some way to make this poor old chap forget, his troubles for a while, but we hadfnot his kindly art, and so had to leave the raven to his griefe, After breakfast we olimbed the hill, and visited the ancient castle of Hirschhoin, and the ruined church near it. There were some curious old bas reliefs leanings against the inner walls of the church—sculptured lords of Hirschhorn is complete armour, and ladies of Hirschhorn in the pictures que court chatumes of the middle lages. These things are suffering damage and passing, to decay, for the last Hirschhorn has been dead two hundred years, and there is nobody now who cares to preserve the family relies. In the channel was a twisted atone column, and the captain told us a legend about it, of course, for in the matter of legends he could not restrain himself ; but I do not repeat his tale became there was nothing plausible about it that the hero wrenched this column into its present screw-shape with his hands-jus: one single wrench. All the rest of the legend was doubtful.

But Hirschhorn is best seen from a distages, down the river. Then the clustered brown towers perched on the green hilltop, and the old battlemented stone wall stretching up and over the greasy ridge and disappearing in the leafy see beyond, make a picture whose grace and beauty entirely satisfy the eye.

We descend from the church by steep stone stairways which corved this way and that down narrow alleys between the packed and dirty tenements of the village. It was a quarter well stocked with deformed, leering, ankempt and uncombed idiots, who held out hands or caps and begged piteously. The people of the quarter were not all idiots, of course, but all that bagged seemed to be and were said to be.

I was thinking of going by skiff to the next town, Neckarateinach a so I ran to the river aide in advance of the party and saked a man there is he had a west to hire. I supman there it he k. d.a. out to hire. I suppose I must have apoken High German,— Court German,—I intended it for that anyway,—so he did not understand me. I turned and twisted my question around and about, trying to strike that man's average but failed. He could not make out what I wanted. Now Mr. K., arrived, faced this same man, looked him in the eye, and emptied this sentence on him, in the most gift and couldent way:

"Can man boat get here?" 'Can man boat get here?

The mariner promply understood and promptly asswered. I can comprehend why he was able to understand that particular seffence, because by mere accident all the words in it except get have the same sound and the same meaning in German that they have in English; but how be managed to understand Mr. X e next remark pursuled me. I will insert it presently. X, turned away a moment, and Lasked, the mariner if he could not find a board, and so construct an additional seat. I spoke in the purest German, but I might as well have spoken in the nurest Chectaw, for all the good it did. The man tried his best to understand me; he tried, and kept on trying, harder and harder, until I saw it was really of no use, and said, -

There, don't strain yourself,—it is of no consequence high on tonnend as a mile Then X. turned to him and enisply said, -

Machen Sie a flat board, of hard and have I wish my epitaph may tell the truth about me if the man did not answer up at once, and say he would go and borrow a board as soon as he had lit the pipe which he was filling. We changed our mind about taking a boat so we did not have to go. I have given Mr. X.'s two remarks just as he made them. Four of the five words in the first one were Euglish, and that they were also German was only applied that, not intentional; three out of the five words in the second remark were English, and English only, and the two German ones did not mean anything in particular, in such a connection.

X. always spoke English to German, but his plan was to turn the sentence wrong, and first and upside down, seconding to German construction, and sprinkle in a German word without any sessutial meaning to it, here and there by way of flavour. Yet he always, made himself understood. could make those dialect apeaking raftamen understand hr sometimes, when even young Z had si'rd with them i and young Z. was a pretty good German scholar. For one thing, X. always spoke with auch and po English anothe atuden oharmi facility lish. Saxon them. other p How spired raft ha at all, a crack danger leak ib matei B. 0000 got to smooth shores, where. As I perceiv noting day, h and op this is get acc For. Heidel studen > found 1. I cause: 2. 1 partice each o State: 3. I all, bu 4. 4 Germa corps. and t

5. 4 Europ 6. 4 to it, 7.... where 8. 1 of not

9. 1 show 10. tion.

.11.

hire I suph-German, me, I turnaround and an's average out what I , faced this e, and empte most glik eratood and prehend why t particular the same German that be managed ark puzzled K. turned e mariner if so construct the parest ve spoken in good it did. erstand me ; harder and y of no use,

-it is of no and crisply

i the truth d borrow a pipe which t taking a have given made them. st ope were leo German ional; three ond remark and the two hing in parerman, but wrong, and to German German aning to it, r. Yet he g raftamen when even and young an scholar. poke with such of confidence,—perhaps that "helped and possibly the raftsmen's dialect was what is called platt-Deutch, and so they found his English more familiar to their sare than another man's German Quite indifferent atudents of German can read Fritz Reuter's obarming platt-Doutch tales with some little facility because many of the words are English. I suppose this is the tongue which our Saxon ancestors carried to England with them. By and by I will inquire of some other philologista mend mens has

However, in the meantime, it had transpired that the men employed to esuik the raft had found that the leak was not a leak at all, but only a crack bety non the loge, a crack which belonged there, and was not dangerous, but had been imagnified into leak by the disordered imagination of the matei. Therefore we went about again with a good degree of confidence, and presently got to see without accidents. As we swam amoothly lalong between the enchanting shores; we fell to swapping notes cabout manners and customs in Germany and else-here with hat hoped in forces Inc. As I write, now, many months (later, 1 perceive that each of us, by observing and noting and enquiring, diligently and day by day, had managed to lay in a most warled and opulent stock of misinformation, " But this is not surprising; it is very difficult to get accurate details in any country, and a For example, I had the idea, once, in Heidelberg, to find out all about those five student-corps. .. I started with the White-cap corps. I began to inquire of this and that and the other citizen, and here is what I found out : .

1. It is called the Prussian Corps, because none but Prussians are admitted to it.

2. It is called the Prussian Corps for no particular reason. It has simply pleased each corps to name itself after some German State.

3. It is not named the Brassian Corps at all, but only the White Cap Corps. 1 15

4. Any student can belong to it who is a German by birth, was it across we mind ware

5. Any, student can belong to it who is European by birth. A company of him

6. Any European-born student can belong to it, except he be a Frenchman.

7. Any student can belong to it, no matter where he was born. I and southed the it

& No student can belong to it who is not ! of noble blood,

9. No student can belong to it who cannot show three full generations of noble descent. 10. Nobility is not a necessary qualifica-# 25 to 2 6 612

12. Money qualification is noncense such a thing has never been thought of a thing has never been thought of.

I got some of this information from students themselves,—students who did not belong to the loops. I finally went to headquarters—to the White Caps—where I would have gone in the first place if I had been acquainted. But even at headquarters I tound difficulties; I perceived that there were things about the White Cap Corps which loop member knew and another our didn't. It was natural for very few members of any organization know all that one be known about the II doubt if there is a man or a woman in Heidelberg who would man or a woman in Heidelberg who would not answer promptly and confidently three ont of every live questions about the White Cap Corps which a stranger might ask; yet it is a very safe bet that two of the three answers would be incorrect every time.

answers would be incorrect every time.

"There is one German custom which is universal—the bowing courted by to strangers when sitting down at table or riving up from it. This bow startles a stranger out of his self-possession, the first time is county, and he is likely to fail over a chair or comething, in his embarrasument, the interest of the self-possession. but it pleases him nevertheless. One soon learns to expect this bow and be on the lookent and ready to return it jobut to dearn to lead off and make the initial bow one's self is a difficult matter for a diffident man. One thinks, wif I rise to go, and tender my bow and these ladies and gentlemen take it into their heads to ignore the custom of their nation, and not return it, how shall I feel, in case I survive to feel any-thing? Therefore he is afraid to venture. He site out the dinner, and makes the strangers rise first and originate the bowing. A table d'hote dinner is à tedious affair for a man who seldom touches anything after the three first discourses; therefore I used to do some pretty dreary waiting because of my fears. It took me months to assure myself that these fears were groundless, but I did assure myself at last by experimenting diligently through my agent. I made Harris get up and bow and leave; invariably his bow was returned, then I got up and bowed myself and retired.

Thus my education proceeded easily and comfertably for me, but not for Harris. Three courses of a table d'hote dinner wero enough "for me, but Harris preferred thirteen!

Even after I had acquired full confidence, and no longer needed the agent's help, I sometimes encountered difficulties. Once at Baden-Badeo I nearly lost a train because I could not be sure that three young ladica 11. No moneyless student can belong to it. opposite me at table were Germans, since I hal not heard them speak; they might be American, they might he English, it was not safe to venture a hew; but just as I had got that far with my thoughts, one of them began a German remark, to my great relief and ligratitude; and before he had got out her third word, our bone, had been delivered; and graciously returned, and we were off.

Torre is a friendly something about the Gyrnan character which is very winning. When Harris and I were making a pedestrian tour through the Black Forest, we stopped at a little country inn for dinner one day; two young, ladies and a young goutle men outered and sat down opposite us. They were pedestrians, too, Our kuspeacks were atrapped upon our backs, but they had a sturdy bouth along to parry heirs for thom. All parties were hungry, so there was no talking. By and by the naual bows ward exchanged, and we separated; As we get at a late breakfast in the hotel at Allerheiligen, next morning; these young people entered and took places must us with out abserving na; but presently they mw us and at once bowed and am led g not coremoniously, but with the gratified took of people who have found acquaintances where they were expecting, strappers. Tuen they spake of the weather, and the roads. We also spoke of the weather and the reads. Next, they said they had had an enj yable walk, notwithstanding the weather. We said that that had been our case, too; Then they said they had walked thirty English miles the day before, and asked how many we had walked. I could not fre, so I told Il cris to do it. Harris told them we had made thirty English miles, too. That was trub I wa had " made " them, though we hall hall a little assistance has and there.

After breakfast they found us, trying to blast some information out of the dumb hotel clerk about routes, and observing that we were not succeeding pretty well, they wout and got their maps and things, and pointed out and explained our course so clearly that even a New York detective could have followed at 1 And when we started they spoke out a hearty good by and wished us a pleasant journey. Perhaps they were more generous with us than they might have been with native waysarers becan a we were a forlorn lot and in a strange land; I don't know; I only know it was lovely to be treated so, fad the Very well, I took an American young lady to one of the fine balls in Baden-Baden, dress was not according to rule : I don't remember what it was, it now placinething was waiting -her back hair, or a shawl, but a fau, or a shovely or bomething. The cff isl was ever so polite, and ever so sorry, but the to was very sembarrassing, for many eyes were on us. But now a richly dressed girl stenued out of the ball-room, inquired into the trouble, and said she would the it in a moment. The took Mus Jones to the robing room, and soon brought her sage to regubulou trim, and then we entered the hallrouth with this behalactress mithillinged p Boing safe, now: I began to suzzle through my studere but augrammatical thanks, when there was a suddin musual recognition—the benefabtress and I had niet at Allerheiligen. Lwb weeks had not althout her gual face, and plainty hur heart was in the right place yet, but there was abob a defference between these of thes and the slotted I had seen her nu before, whom showns walking thirty miles a day in the Black Eireat, that it was quite natural that I had failed to recognize ner somor. I had on my other snit, ton, but my Gorman would bettay me to a persou who had he rd is once, and way, " She brought her ! brether and : nister, and they mate our way smooth for that evening.

Well-mouths afterward, Hwas oriving through the atreets of Minich in a cab with a German lady, one day, when she said-

There, that is Prince Ludwig and his wife, walking along there.' 5 but

Livers body was bowing to them-cabmen, little children, and every cody a se familities were returning all the bows and over losing nobody, when a young lady met them and made a deep curidy. add dillust is probably one of the ladius of the court, said my German friend, 2 21 21 ...

sed said in first and of accept a syndron her. I don't know her name but I know hereof have knowed her at Alberheitien and Bulen-Bades. She ought to be an Emprese, out the may be buly as Duches : " is the way things go on in this world: (c' a(sure)) allows asks as Gérman as civil question, he will be quite sure to get a civil anawer you stop a German in the street and ask him to direct you to a certain place, he shows no sign of feeling offended tolt they place be diti ult to find, ten to some the mans will drop his own matters and go with & wan ! show you. In London, too, many withite, atrangets have walke tures oral min ke with me to show me my way. There is bomeone night, and at the entrance door thing very real about this section follows, up stairs we a were halted a layer and Quite often, in German, shopk eperation official semesting a stone; Miss adopte's could not furnish mention arrived b wanted, bave show di Boi made trout our re oursio a mile river. be tw mean .. For quain Imagi a few oppos perate instan fifty.o a bow emas. tingni hill v bushe brap round dista > jamm round Th whi le all th isn't fiuish long wall the v first little BAYOR roofs the d and t with

for it

ed ca

lofty form aure, agoer bush any i

80, fr

the l

have sent one of their employes with me to show me a place where it could be had.

stratistics to sCHAPTER XIX. x tine", ad)

Bowever, I wander from the reft, We made the port of Neckarateinach in good sesson, and went to the hotel and orders ta trout dinner: the same to be ready against our return from a two-hoar pedest ian ex-cursion to the village and castle of Dilaborg, a mile ! distant, for the other side of the river. I do not mean that we proposed to be two heurs making two miles—no, we means to employ most of the time in inspecting Dilaberg.

For Dilaberg is a queint place, It is most quaintly and picturesquely mituated too. Imagine the beautiful river before you; then a faw rods of brilliant green | sward on its opposite shore ; then a sudden hill-no preparatory gently rising (slopes, but a sort of instantaneous; hilt-a hill two hundred and fifty or three hundred feet high, as round as a bowel, with the same taper supward that an inverted bowl, has, and with habout the same relation of height to dismeter that distinguishes a bowl of good honest depth-a hill which a is thickly a clothed | with green bushes—a comely, sahapely shill, trising abruptly out of the dead devel of the aurrounding green plains, visible from a great distance down the bend of the river, and with just exactly mom on the top of its head for itaste-pled and turreted and roof-clustered cap of architecture, which same in tightly jammed and compacted within the perfectly round hoop of the aucient village wall:

There is no house outside the wall on the while hill, on any vestige of a former house; all the houses are inside the wall, but there isn't room for another one. It is really a finished town, and has been finished a very long time. There is no apace between the wall and the first circle of buildings; no, the village wall is itself the rear; wall of the first circle of buildings, and the roof jut & little over the well and shue furnish it with eaves. The general level of the massed roofs is gracefully broken and relieved by the dominating towers of the suined castle and the tall spires of a couple of churches ; so, from a distance Dilaberg has rather more the look of a king's crown than a cap. That lofty green eminence and its quaint a cornet form quite a striking picture, you may be sure, in the flush of the evening sun.
We crossed over in a boat and began the ascent by a narrow, steep path which plunged us at once into the leafy decus of the bushes. But they were not good deeps by any means, for the sun's rays were weltering hot, and there was little or no breeze to temper them. As we panted up the charn acods; we met brown, hardwarded and barefroted boys and girls occasionally, and sometimes men; they came upon as without warning, they gave us good-day, flashed out of sight in the bashes, and were going at and denly and mysteriously as they had some. They were bounds formthe other sides of the river to work; ".This path had been travelled by many generations of these people's They have always gone down to the valley to earn their bread; but they have, always elimbed. their hill again to out it, and to sleep in their anng town.

It is said that the Dithergers do not emi-grate much's they find that living up there above the world in their peaceful matinis pleasanter than living down in the troublens world. " The seven hundred juhabitants are all blood-kin to eack other, too; they have always been blood kin to each other for fifteen hundred years for they are simply que large family, and they like the showe folks better than they like strangers, hence they per-istently stay at home, wilt has been said that for a gos Dilaborg. has been merely a thriving and diligent idiot-factory. I saw no idiots there, but the Captain said, ! Because of a late years the government has taken to lugging themioff to say lums and otherwheree; and government wants to oripple the factory, too, and is trying to get these Dilabergers to marry but of the family, but they don't like

The captain probably imagined all this, as modern soismos denies that the intermarrying of relatives deteriorates the stuckiese;

Arrived within the wall, we found the usual village sights and life. We moved along a parrow, cropked lane which had been paved in the middle ages. A strapping ruddy girl was beating flax or some such stuff in a little bit of a goods-box of a liarn, and she awung hen flail with a will—if it was a flail; I was not farmer enough to know what she was at; a frowsy, barelegged girl was herding half a desen geens with a stick-driving them along the lane and keeping them out of the dwellings are cooper was at work in a shop which I know he did not make to large a thing as a hogshead in for there was not room. In the front room of dwellings girls and women, were cooking or spinning and ducks and chickens were waddling in and out over the threshold, picking up chauce crumbs and holding pleasant neaverse; o very old and wrinkled man sat asleep to fore his door, with his chin upon his breast and his extingui hed pipe in his lap ; soiled children were playing in the dut every where along the lane, unmindful of the sun.

bhillmued 14 puzzle through Contintain the Allerheiligeo. rer gunt face, the right place erence between I bad seen her walking thirty at, that it was t to reorgaize ther snit, ton, me to a perany way. . She ster and they b evening. I was oriving in's cab with ahe said gand his wife, hem-oabmen, e se Lami they ad oveil obing mos them and

e ladies of the

or tribuitor then all know ne hut I know brheitlien and

le an Emprese,

ess : It is the

rituncation, he II BOOK OF If et kud aak him

e, he shows to thezalace be

the man will

with & wan ! many & true, al ado ks with here is some-

S'ill politimess.

pk epora who

ole L wanted.

1

er stante il

En de de la

o I don't re-

seinething! was

hawl or a fan.

no will ist was but the

or many eyes

ly dresont girl

inquired into

oldstix is sin a

es to the rob-

her back to ve-

termi the | hall-

of Except the sleepy old man, everybody was at work, but the place was very still; and very pateral, severtheless, so still that the distant cacking the autocosful her smote upon the car but little delled by intervening sounds. That commonest of village sights was lacking here—the public pump, with its great atone tank or trough of limpid water, and its group of gousiping; pitcher-bearers; for there is no well or fountain or spring on this tall hills eisterne of rais-water are used.

Our sloenstocks and muslin tails compolled attention, and as we moved through the village we lightered a considerable pro-cession of little boys and girls, and so went ince some bestate de to a the advantage of It proved to be an extensive pile of orumbling walls, arohes and towers, massive, properly grouped for picturesque effect, weedy, grass grown, and satisfactory. The children seted as guides; they walked us along the top of the highest wall, then took us up into a high tower and showed as a wide and beantiful landscape, made /up of wavy distances, of woody hills, and a nearer prospect of un-dulating expanses of weem lowlands, on the one hand, and castle-graced erage and ridges on the other, with the shining curves of the Neckar flowing between it But the principal show, the chief pride of the children, was the ancient and empty well in the grass-grown court of the castle. Its massive atone ourb stands up three of four feet above ground, and is whole and uninjured, y The children said that in the Middle Ages this well was four hundred feet deep and furnished all the village with an abundant app ply of water, in war and peace. They said that in that old day its bettem was below the level of the Neckar, hence the water supply was inexhaustible.

But there were some who believed it had never been a well inteally and was never deeper than it is now—eighty feet; that at that depth a subterranean passage branched from it and descended gradually to a remote place in the valley, where it opened into somebody's cellar or lother hidden recess, and that the secret of this locality is now lost. Those who hold this belief may that herein lies the explanation that Dilaberg, besieged by Tilley and many a soldier before him, was never taken; after the forgest and cleasest sieges: the besiegers were seconshed to perceive that the besieged were such as and hearty as ever, and as well furnished with munitions of war—therefore it must be that the Dilabergers had been bringing these things in through the subterranean passage all the time, as a fact the second second.

The children said that there was in truth a subterraneau outlet down there, and they would prove it also they set a great trues of straw-enoufire and threw it down the well, while we leaned on the curb and watched the glowing mass decorate. It struck bottom and gradually burned out. No smoke either they The children clapped, their hands and said we mintered by 2 to Jung and allower.

a You see! Nothing makes so much smoke as burning straw—now where did the smoke go to, if there is no subterranean out-discrit seemed quite evident that the subterranean outlet indeed existed. But the finest thing within the ruin's limits was a noble linden; which the children said was four hundred years old, and no doubt it was. It had a inighty trunk and a mighty spread of limb and foliage. The limbs near the ground were nearly the thickness of a barrel. That tree had witheseed the secults of men in mail—how senote such a time seems, and how ungrapable is the fact that real men ever did fight increal armour l—and it had seen the time when these broken arches and crumbling battlements were a trim and strong and stately fortress, fluttering its gay banners in the sun, and peopled with vigorous humanity—how impossibly long ago that seems !—and here it stands yet, and possibly may still be standing here; sunning itself and dreaming its historical dreams, when to-day shall have been joined to the days called ancient.

in Well, we sat down under the tree to smoke, and the captain delivered himself of his legend, and have reason to the legend of the legend of

THE LEGEND OF DILBERG CASILE.

It was to this effect. In the old times there was one agreat company assembled at the castle, and festivity ran high. Of course there was a hunted chamber in the castle, and one day the talk fell upon that. It was add that whoever slept in it would not wake again for fifty years. Now when a young knight named Conrad von Geisberg heard this, he said that if the castle were his he would destroy that chamber, so that no foolish person might have the chance to bring so dreadful a minfortune upon himself and afflict such as loved him with the memory of the little Straightway the company privately laid their heads together to contrive some way to get this sepematicious young man to bleep in that chamber. And they succeeded—in this way. They personaded his betrotted, a lovely, mischerous young creature, niece of the lord of the castle to help them in their plot. She presently took him aside and had speech with him. She ured all her persuasions, but could not shake him; he said have he have her bappy a neck, an that her wery rea her micompilatin.

feating chamber and by.
When him, he The who cobwebs rotten to fall to the fell to the fel

This said.

He ro clothing the gard he was ping into great he aged at stopped Convad

Ulrion The then sai The Yos

The young said to Is guests?

Conr.
'I die

The wonder

'I ar

great trues of wn the well. and watched struck bot-No smoke I their hands es: so much chere did the rrancan out-hat the sub-

d. | But the limite was a ren mid was doubt it was ighty spread be near the s of a barrel. assaults of time reems, ot that real our !- and it roken archea o 'a frim and

ering its gay with vigorong ago that and possibly inning dteelf ms when to. s days called the tree to

d himself of tan benibusi

ASPLE, OF VI o old times assembled at . "Of course ecastle, and hat "It was ald not wake hen a young isberg heard ere his he that no foole to bring so imself and e memory of rivately laid tome way to to pleep in

ded in this etrothed, a re, niece of hem in their ide and had ill her per-m; he said h's belief was firm that if he should sleep there he would wake no more for fifty years, and it made him shudder to think of it.

Catharina began to weep. This was a better argument; Conrad could not hold out against it. He yielded and said she should have her wish it she would only smile and be bappy again. She flung her arms about his bappy again. She flung her arms about his neck, and the kisses the gave him showed that her thaukulness and her pleasure were very real. Then she flew to tell the company her ancess, and the applause she received made her grad and prout she had undertaken her mission, since all alone she had accomplished when the applause had failed. complished what the multitude had failed

At midnight, that night, after the usual feasting, Courad was taken to the har need chimber and left there." He fell asleep by

When he awoke again and looked about him, his hears stood still with horror! The whole serect of the chamber was changed. The walls were mouldy and hung with secrent cobwebs; the curtains and beddings were rotten; the furniture was fickety and ready to fall to pieces. He sprang out of bed, but his quaking kness anak under him and he fell to the floor.

This is the weakness of age, he

He rose and sought his clothing. It was clothing no longer. The colours were gone, the garments gave way in many places while he was putting them on. He fled, shuddering into the corridor, and along it to the great hall. Here he was met by a mi dle-great hall. aged at anger of a kind countenance, who stopped and gazed at him with surprise. Courad said :-

Good sir, will you send hither the lord

The stranger looked puzzled a moment, then said.

'The lord Ulrich ? 'Yes-if you will be so good.'

The stranger called. Withelm 1' A young serving man came, and the stranger said to him.

'Is there a lord Ulrich among the guests ?

I know none of the name, so please your honour.

Conrad said hesitatingly-

'I did not mean a guest, but the lord of the castle, sir. ugari

The stranger and the servant exchanged wondering in glances, it Then in the a former said-

'I am the lord of the castle.'

Since when, sir ? 14 ' 2 sads 25

Since the death of my father, the good lord Ulrich, more than forey years ago. Conrad sails upon a beach, and covered his face with his hands while he rocked his body to and fro and mouned. The stranger said in a low voice to the servant

'A lear me this poor old creature is mad; Call some ons.

In a moment several people came, and grouped themselves about, talking in whitepers. Coursel looked up and scanned the taces about him wistfully. Then he shook his head and said, in a grieved voice-

No, there is none among ye that I know. I am old and alone in the world. They are dead and gone this many years that cared for me. But aure, some of these uged ones I see about me can tell me some litue word or two concerning them.' Several bent and tottering men and women eame hearer and answered his questions about each former friend as he mentioned the fismes. This one they said had been dead ten years, that one twenty, another thirty. Each succeeding blow struck heavier and neavier. At last the sufferer said-

There is one more, but I have not the courage to O, my lost Catharina !

One of the old dames said-An, I knew her well, poor soul. A misfortune overtook her lover, and she died of sorrow nearly filty years ago. She lieve under the linden tree without the court.

Conrad bowed his head and said with but Ah, why did I ever wake ! And so she died of grief for me, poor child. So young, so sweet, so good !" She never wittingly did a hurtful thing in all the little summer of her life. Her loving debt shall be repaid— for I will die of grief for her.

His head dropped upon his breast. In a moment there was a wild burst of joyous lauguter, a pair of round young arms were flung about Corrad's neck and a sweet voice cried

. There, Conrad mine, thy kind words kill me—the farce shall go no further ! Look up, and laugh with us—'twas all a jest!'

And he did look up, and gazed, ru's dazed wonderment for the disguises were stripped away, and the sged men and women were bright and young and gay again. Catharina's happy tongue ran on—

"I was a marvelrous jest, and bravely carried out." They gave you a heavy sleeping draught before you went to bed, and in the night they bore you to a ruined chimber where all had failen to decay, and placed these rage of clothing by you. And when your sleep was spent and you came forth, two strangers, well instructed in their parts, were here to meet you; and all we, your friends in our disguises, were close at hand, to see and hear, you may be sure. Ah, twee a gallant jett. Come, now, and make the ready for the pies, area of the day. How real was thy misery for the moment, thou poor lad I Louis up sud have thy laugh, asset.

He Inked up, searched the merry faces about him in a dreamy way, then sighed and ! I am weary, good strangers, I pray you lead me to her grave.

All the smiles vanished away, every check blaughed. Catharine andk to the ground in

All day the people went about the quatle with troubled faces, and communed together in undertines. A painful husb pervaded the place which had lately been so full of cheery life. Each in his turn tried to arouse Conral out of his hallucination and bring him to himself; but all the answer any gut was a meuk, all bewildered stare, and, then the words-doo's stranger, I have no friends, all are at rost these many years ; ye speak me fair, ye mean me weil, but I know ye not ; I am alone and forturn in the world, - prithee lead

m . to her grave.

Daringtwo years Conrad spent his days, from the early morning till the night, under the limber tree, mourning over the imaginary grave of his tatherina. Catherina was the only company of the harmless madman. He was very friendly towards her because, as he said, in some ways, she reminded him of his Catharina whom he had loss fifty yea a sgo. He often said,—

She was so g vy, so happy hearted, -but

Nhe was as gry, so happy nearred, but you never sinds; and asways when you think I am not looking, you cry.

When Coma I died, they buried him under the limiten, according to his directions, so that he might rest near his poor Catharina.

Then Catharina sat under the linden alone, every day and all day long, a great many years, and king to no one, and never smiling; and at last her long repentance was regarded with death, and she was buried by Courally side.

Harris pleased the captain by saying it was a go d legend; and pleased him tucher by adding .-

New that I have seen this mighty tree, vigorous with its four hundred years, I feel a desire to he leve the legend for its sake ; on I will hum ur, the desire, and cousider that the tree really watches over those poor hearts and feels a sort of human tenderness for them.

We returned to Neckarsteinach, plunged our hot head into the trough at the town pump, and then went to the hotel and ate our trout dinner in leisurely comfort in the garden, with the beautiful Nector flowing at our feet, the quaint Dileberg looming be-our feet, the quaint Dileberg looming be-youd, and the graceful towers and hattle-ments of a couple of mediaval cartles (called the 'Swallow's Nest's and The Brothers) sanisting the rugged scenery of a bend of the river down to one right. got to see in reason to make the eight mile run to Heidelberg before the ni ht shut down. We sailed by the hotel in the mellow glow of squeet, and came also hing down with the mad ourrent into the narrow pas-sage between the dyken. I pelieved I could shout the bridge myself, so I went to the forward, triplet of logs, and relieved the pilot of his pole and his responsibility.

We went tearing along in a most exhibitrating way, and I performed the delicate duties of my office very well indeed for a first attempt; but perceiving presently, that I really was going to shoot the bridge itself instead of the archway under it, I judiciously stepped ashore. The next moment I had my long coveted desire: I saw a raft wrucked. It his the pier in the center and want all to smash and scatteration like a how went all to smash and scatteration like a box of matches struck by lightning.

I was the only one of our party who saw the grand sight; the others were attitudinzing, for the beautit of the long rank of young laties who were promensding on the bank, and so they lost it. But I helped to fish them out of the river, down below the bridge, and then described it to them as well 1 could. They were not interested, though. They said they were wet aud felt ridiculous and did not care anything for descriptions of conery. The young latter, and other people, crowded around and shweed a great deal of sympathy, but that did not help matters; for my friends said they did not want sympathy, they wanted a back alley and solitude.

CHAPTER XX. Indiana

Next morning brought good news-onr tranks had arrived from Hamburg at last. Lot this me a warning to the reader. The Gormans are very conscientions, and this trait makes them very particular. Therefore if you tell a German you want a thing done immediately, he takes you at your wool; he thinks you meen what you say; so he does that thing immediately—according to his ides of immediately—which is about a week; that is, it is a wrek if it refers to the building of a garment, or it is an hour and a half

"the sceker after in ormation is, referred to Appendix E for our Capalits Legend of the Swallow's Nest 'ana.' The Brothers.

f it r trun at you go on topgu on my ful, Ham ed H that the le scient bagg there Na > my could he in took were sue : house Gran keepi follor aside Were An 1 bay thing a hol antic It is used thing my penc thin little and and on il It co said in th Hen shov plea plat its :

who first it h to s who hotel and ste comfort in the tar flowing at gloowing beres and hattlecastles (called and 'The I scenery of a right. We the eight mile on ht shut el in the melslashing down e flarrow paslieved I could I went to the relieved the sibility.

the delicate indeed for a ng. presently, not the bridge ader it, I judicate moment I : I saw a raft the center and tion like a box party who saw ere attitudinrank of young on the bank, helped to fish in below the better as well ested, though, elt ridiculous escriptions of other people, great deal of sut sympathy, olitide.

d news—our aburg at last, reader. The sur, and this in. Therefore a thing done our wool; he is to the build-ur and a half is referred to legend of the f it refers to the cocking of a trout. Very well; if you tell a German to send your 'trunk to you by 'slow frieight,' he takes you at your word; he sends it by, 'slow freight,' and you cannot imagine how long you will go on enlarging your admiration of the expressiveness of that phrass in the German tongue, before you get that trunk. The hair on my trunk was soft and thick and youthful, when I got it ready for shipment in Hamburg; it was baldheaded when it reached Heidelberg. However, it was still sound, that was a comfort, it was not battered in the least; the baggagemen seemed to be conscientiously careful, in Germany, of the baggage intrusted to their hands. There was nothing now in way of our departure, therefore we set about our preparations.

Naturally my chief collectude was about my collection of Keramics. Of course I could not take it with me, that would be inconvenient, and dangerous basides. I took advice, but the best bries brackers were divided as to the wisset course to pursue; some said pack the collection and warehouse it; others said try to get it into the Grand Ducal Museum at Mannheim for safe keeping. So I divided the collection, and followed the advice of both parties: I set aside, for the Museum, those articles which were the most frail and precious:

Among these was my Etruscan tear-jug. I have made a little sketch of it here; that thing oreeping up the side is not a bug; it is a hole. I bought this tear jug of a dealer in antiquities for four hundred and fifty dollars. It is very rare. The man said the Etruscans used to keep tears or something in these things, and that it was very hard to get hold of a broken one, now. I also set aside my Henri II, plate. See sketch from my pencil; it is in the main correct, though I think I have foreshortened one end of it a little too much, perhaps. This is very fine and rare; the shape is exceedingly beautiful and nunual. It has wonderful decorations on it, but I am not able to reproduce them. It cost more than the tear-jug, as the dealer said there was not another plate just like it in the world. He said there was much false Henri II. ware around, but that the genuineness of this piece was unquestionable. He showed me its pedigree, or its history if you please; it was a document which traced this plate's movements all the way down from its birth,—showed who bought it, from whom, and what he paid for it—from the first buyer down to me, whereby I saw that it had gone steadily up from thrty, five cents to seven hundred dollars. He said that the whole Keramic world would be informed that it was now in my possession and would make a note of it, with the price paid.

There were Masters in those days, alas, it is not so now. Of course the main preciousness of this piece lies ir its colour; it is that old, sensuous, pervading, ramifying, interpolating, transboreal blue which is the despair of modern art. The little eletch which I have made of this gemeannot and does not do it justice, since I have been obliged to leave out the colour. But I've got the expression though.

However, I must not be frittering awa the reader's time with these details. I did not intend to go into any detail at all, at tirst, but it is the failing of the true keramicer, or the true devotee in any department of brica-bracery, that once he gets his tongue or his pen started on his darling theme, he cannot well stop until he drops from exhaustion. He has no more sense of the flight of time than has any other lover when talking of his sweetheart. The very 'marks' on the bottom of a piece of rare crockery are able to throw me into a gibering costsey, and I could forsake a drowning relative to help d'spute about whether the atopple of a departed Buon Retiro scent bottle was genuine or spurious.

Many people say that for a male person, brica-brac hunting is about as robust a business as making doll-clothes, or decorating Japanese pots with decalcomanie butter-flies would be, and those people fling mud at that elegant Englishman, Byng, who wrote a book called 'The Brica-Brac Hunter,' and make fun of him for chasing around after what they choose to 'Call' his despicable trifles; and for gushing over these trifles; and for exhibiting his deep intantile delight in what they call his 'tuppenny collection of beggarly trivislities;' and for beginning his book with a picture of himself seated, in a "appy self-complacent attitude, in the midst of his poor little ridiculous bric-a-brac junk abop.

It is easy to say these things; it is easy to revile us, easy to despise us; therefore, let these people rail on; they cannot feel as Byng and I feel,—it is their loss, not ours. For my part I am content to be a bricea bracer and a keramicer,—more, I am proud to be so named. I am proud to know that I losse my reason as immediately in the presence of a rare jug with an illustrious mark on the bottom of it, as if I had just emptied that jug. Very well; I packed and stored a part of my collection, and the rest of it I placed in the care of the Grand Ducal Museum in Mannheim, by permission.

My Old Blue China Cat remains there yet. presented it to that excellent institution.

I presented it to that excellent institution. I had but one misfortune with my things. An egg which I had kept back from break fast that morning, was broken in packing. It was a great pity. I had shown it to the best connoiseurs in Heidelberg, and they all said it was an antique. We spent a day or two in farewell visits, and then left for Baden-Baden. We had a pleasant trip of it, for the Baine sailar is always. Lordy. The only Rhine valley is always lovely. The only trouble was that the trip was too short. If I remember rightly it only occupied a couple of hours, therefore I judge that the distance was very little, if any, over fifty miles. We quitted the train at Oos, and walked the entire remaining distance to Baden-Baden, with the exception of a lift of less than an hour which we got on a passing waggon, the weather being exhaustingly warm. We came into town on foot.

One of the first persons we encountered, as we walked up the street was the Rev. Mr. , an old friend from America a lucky encennter, indeed, for his is a most gentle, refined and sensitive nature, and his company and companionship area geruine refreshment. We knew he had been in Europe sometime, but were not at all expecting to run across him. Both parties burst into loving enthusi. asms, and Rev. Mr. -- said :

'I have got a brim-ful reservoir of talk to rour out on you, and an empty one ready and thirsting to receive what you have got; we will sit up till midnight and have a good satisfying interchange, for I leave here early in the morning. We agreed to that of

I had been vaguely conscious for a while, of a person who was walking in the atreet abreast of us; I had glanced furtively at him once or twice, and noticed that he was a fine, large, vigorous young fellow, with an open, independent countenance, fair, shaded with a pale and even almost imperceptible crop of early down, and that he was clothed from head to heel in cool and enviable snow-I thought I had also noticed white linen. that his head had a sort of listening tilt to Now about this time the Rev. Mr. said :

The eidewalk is hardly wide enough for three, so I will walk behind; but keep the talk going, keep the talk going, there's no time to lose, and you may be sure I will do my share. He ranged himself behind us and straightway that stately snow-whit, young fellow closed up to the side-walk alongside him, fetched him a cordial slap on the shoulder with his broad palm, and aung out with a hearty cheeriness :

'Americans, for two-and-a-half and the money np? Hey?

and

too. give jab

do

aDÓ don

you

tes

076

8DC wh dor

the

bor

hai

get

Th

OVE

hot

001 hal

to tal

the 801 all

hp

lik

8D 8D m

211

go

ai

Yes -we are Americans.

Lord love you, you can just bet that's what I am, every time! Put it there! Reverend laid his diminutive hand in it, and got so cordist a shake that we heard his glove burrt under it.

Say, didn't I put you up right ?'

Sho! I spotted you for my kind the minute I heard your clack. You been over here long?"

About four months. Have you been over long? Well I should say so! Going on two years, by geeminy ! Say, are you home-

'No, I can't say that I am. Are you?' yes. This with immense on-thusiasm.

The Reverend chrunk a little in his olothes, and we were aware, rather by instinct than otherwise, that he was throwing out signals of distress to us; but we did not interfere or try to succour him, for we were quite happy. 1611 8

The young fellow hooked his arm into the Reverend's now, with a confiding and grateful air of a waif who has been longing for a friend, and a sympathetic ear, and a chance to lisp once more the sweet accents of the mother tongue and then he limbered up the muscles of his mouth and turned himself loose—and with such a relish! Some of his words were not Sunday school words, so I am obliged to put blanks where they occur.

'Yes, indeedy! If I ain't au American there wasn't all I could do to keep from hugging you! My tongue's all warped with trying to curl it around, these -forsaken wind galled nine jointed German words here ; now I tell you that it's awful good to lay it over a Christian word once more and kind of let the old taste soak in. I'm from western New York. My name is Cholley Adams. I'm a student, you know. Been here going on two years. I'm learning to be a horse-doctor. I like that part of it, you know, but -- these people, they won't learn a fellow in his own language, they make him learn in German; so before I could tackle the horse doctoring I had to tackle this miserable language.

First off, I thought it would certainly give me the botts, but I don't mind it now, I've got it where the hair's short, I think;

bet that's here!' here!' here!' here!' here!' heard his

if and the kind the been over a been over

2 42 34 g

intellenel

Going on you homere you?

tle in his by instinct rowing out or we were

m into the
and grate.
and grate.
ging for a
i a chance
ents of the ered up the ents of himself lome of his words, so I
hey occur.
rican there
a the good
if it

hugging with trying forsaken n words al good to more and I'm from the Cholley www. Been being to be of it, you hey won't ge, they before I I had to certainly d it now, think;

and dontchuknow, they made me learn Latin, too. Now, between you and me, I wouldn't give a ____ for all the Latin that was ever isbbered; and the first thing I calculate to do when I get through, is to just sit down and forget it. 'Twout take me long, and I don't mind the time, anyway. And I tell you what I the difference between schoolteaching over yonder and the school teaching over here-sho! We don't know anything about it ! Here you've got to peg and pou and peg and there just ain't any let-up-and what you learn here, you've got to know, dontchuknow-or else you'll have one of - spavined, spectacled, ringboned, knock-kneed old professor, in your hair. I've been here long enough, and I'm getting blessed tired of it, mind I tell you. The old man wrote me that he was coming over in June, and said that he'd take me home in August, whether I was done with my education or not, but durn him, he didn't come; never said why; just sent me a hamper of Sunday school books, and told me to be good, and hold on a while. I don't take to Sunday school books; dontchuknew, -I don't hanker after them when I can get pie-but I read them, anyway, because whatever the old man tells me to do, that's the thing that I'm a-going to do, or tear somothing you know. I buckled in and read all those books, because he wanted me to; but that kind of thing don't excite me, I like something hearty. But I'm awful homesick. I'm sick from ear socked to crupper, and from orupper to book joint ; but it ain't any use, I've got to stay here, till the old man drops the rag and gives the word— yes, air. right here in this——country l've sir, right here in this country l've got to linger till the old man says come !and you bet your bottom dollar, Johnny, it ain't just as easy as it is for a cat to have twins !'

At the end of this prefane and cordial explosion he fetched a prodigious. Whoosh! to relieve his lungs and make recognition of the heat, and then he straightway dived into his narrative again for 'Johnny's' beliant, beginning, 'Well, it sin't any use talking, some of those old American words do have a kind of a bully awing to them; a man can express himself with 'em—a man can get at what he wants to say, dontchukuew.'

When we reached our hotel and it seemed that he was about to lose the Reverend, he showed so much sorrow, and begged so hard and so earnestly that the Reverend's heart was not hard enough to hold out against the pleadings—so he went away with the parent-honouring student, like a right Christian, and took supper with him in his lodgings and sat in the surf-beat of his slang and profanity till near midnight, and then left him—left him pretty well talked out. but grateful 'clear down to the frogs,' as he expressed it. The Reverend said it had transpired during the interview that 'Cholley' Adam's father was an extensive dealer in horses in western New York; this accounted for Cholley's enoice of the profession. The Reverend brought away a pretty high opinion of Choney as a manly young fellow, with stuff in him for a useful citizen; he considered him rather a rough gem, but a gem, nevertucless.

CHAPTER XXI.

Baden Baden sits in the laps of the hills, and the natural and artificial beauties of the surrounding are combined effectively and charmingly. The level strip of ground which stretches through and beyond the town is laid out in handsome pleasure grounds, shaded by noble trees and adorned at in-tervals with lofty and sparkling fountainjeta. Thrice a day a fine band makes music in the public promenade before the Conversation-House, and in the afternoon and even-ings that locality is populous with fashion-ably dressed people of both sexue, who march back and forth past the great music stand and look very much bored, though they make a show of feeling otherwise. It seems like a rather aimless and stupid existence, A good many of these people are there for a real purpose, however; they are racked with rheumatism, and they are there to stew it out in the hot baths. These invalids looked melancholy enough, limping about on their canes and crutches, and ap-parently broading over all sorts of cheerles. things. People say that Germany, with her damp atone houses, is the home of rhau matism. If that is so, Providence must have foreseen that it would be so and therefore filled the land with these healing baths. Perhaps no other country is so generously supplied with medicinal springs as Gennary. Some of these baths are good for one ailment, some for another; and again, peculiar ailments are conquered by combining the individual virtues of several different baths. For instance, for some forms of disease, the patient drinks the native hot water of Baden-Baden, with a spoonful of salt from the Carisbad springs dissolved in it. That is not a dose to be forgotten right

They don't sell this hot water; no, you go into the great Trinkhalle, and stand around, first on one foot and then on the other, while two or three young girls sit pottering at some sort of lady-like sewing work iu your neighbourhood and can't seem to see you - polite as three dollar clerke in government offices.

By and by one of these rises painfully, and a retches; -atretches flats and body heavenward till she raises her heels from the floor, at the same time refreshing herself with a yawn of such compreheusiveness that the bulk of her face disappears behind her upper lip and one is able to see how she is con-structed inside—then she slowly closes her cavern, brings down her fists and her heels, comes languidly forward, contemplates you contemptuously, draws you a glass of hot water and sets it down where you can get it by reaching for it. You take it and How much?'—and she returns you, with elaborate indifference, a Nach Beliebe, (what you please.)

This thing of using the common beggar's trick and the common beggar's shibboleth to put you on your liberality when you were expecting a simple straight-forward commercial transaction, adds a little to your prospering sense of irritation. You ignore her reply, and ask again. and ask again-

"How much!"

and she calmly, indifferently, repeats-

Nach Beliebe.

You are getting angry, but you are trying not to show it; you resolve to keep on asking your question till she changes her answer, or at least her annoyingly indifferent manner. Therefore, if your case be like mine, you two fools stand there, and without perceptible emotion of any kind, or any emphasis on any syllable, you look blandly into each other's eyes, and hold the following idiotic conversation-

ारक्र रही †सारा संस्ट ा

i set am a punti

· How much ?'

Nach Beliebe. " How much ?'

- 'Nach Beliebe.' 'How much?'
- ' Nach Beliebe?' · How much?
- 'Nach Beliebe.' "How much?" pass at some position
- 'Nach Beliebe.'
- How much ?' Nach Beliebe.

I do not know what another person would have done, but at this point I gave it up ; that cast iron indifference, that tranquil contemptuousness, conquered me, and I struck my colours. Now I knew she was used to receiving about a penny from manly people who care nothing about the opinions of soullery maids, and about tuppence from moral cowards; but I laid a silver twenty five cent piece within her reach and tried to shrivel her up with this sarcastice speech, I rould ; will it isn't enough, will you stoop sufficiently from your official dignity to say so ? She did not abrive! ... Without deigning to look at me at all, she languidly lifted the coin and bit it into see if it was good. Then she turned her back and platidly waddled to her former roest again, tessing the money into an open till as she went along. She was violor to the last, you see of the ways of this girl because they are typical; her manners are the manners of a goodly number of the Baden-Baden shop-keepers. The shop-keep-er there awindles you if he cap, and justile you whether he succeeds in swindling you or not. The keepers of baths also take great and patient pains to insult you. The frowsy woman who sat at the deek in the lobby of the great Friederichsbad and sold bath tickets, not only insulted me twice every day with rigid fidelity to her great trust, but she took trouble enough to cheat me out of a shilling, one day, to have fairly entitled her to ten. Baden Baden's splendid gamblers are gone, only her miscroscopio knaves remain.

for he pip red ich ich th th

ti a i t

An English gentleman who had been living there several years, said, --'If you could disguire your nationality, you would not find any insolence here. These shop-keepers detest the English and despise the Americans; they are rade to both, more especially to ladies of your nationality and mine. If these go shopping without a gentleman or a man cervant, they are tolerably sure to be subjected to petty insolences, -insolences of manner and tone, rather than aword, though words that are hard to bear are not a ways wanting. I know of an instance where a shop keeper tossed a coin back to an American lady with the remark, enappishly uttered, "We don't take French money here -And I know of a case where an English lady said to one of these shop-keepers, Don't you think you ask too much for this article? and he re; I ed with the question, Do you think you are obliged to buy it? However, these people are not impolite to Russians or Germans, And as to rank, they worship that, for they have long been used to generals and nobles. If you wish to see to what abysee servility can descead, present yourself before a Baden-Baden shop-keeper in the scharacter of a Russian prince, post of mails 19

It is an inane town, filled with sham, and petty fraud, and snobbery, but the baths are good. I spoke with many people, and they

from moral ty-five cent d to shrivel stoop suffi. to say so ?' deigning to lifted the good. Then v waddled the money She was ays of this er manners ber of the shop-keepnd insults dling you

also take
you. The leek in the and sold me twice her great have fairly s aplendid iscroscopio had been ationality. nco here. oglish and rude to of your shopping to petty ind tone, nting. I p keeper ady with Ve don't know of to ene of ink you e reil ed you are e people dermans. for they er of am, and aths are nd they nobles sorvility

Baden.

were all agreed in that. I had had twinger of theumatism uccessingly during three years, but the last one departed after a years, but the last one departed after a fortnight's bathing there, and I have never had one since. I fully believe I left my rheumatism in Baden-Baden. Raden-Baden is welcome to it. It was little, but it was all I had to give. I would have preferred to leave something that was catching, but it was not in fly power.

There are several het springe there, and during two thousand years they have poured forth a never diminishing abundance of the healing water. This water is conducted in pipes to the numerous bath houses, and is reduced to an endurable temperature by the addition of cold water. The new Frieder-ichabad is a very large and beautiful building, and in it one may have any sort of bath ing, and in it one may have any sort of bath that her ever been invented, and with all the additions of herbs and drugs that his allment has need or that the physician of the establishment may consider a useful thing to put into the water. You go there, the life great door, get a bow graduated to you and a nath ticket and an insult from the frowsy woman for a quarter, she strikes a bell and a serving-man conducts you down a long hall and shuts you into a commodious room which has a wathstand, a mirror, a bootjack and a sofa in it, and there you undress at your leisure. The room is divided by a great curtain ; you draw this curtain aside, and find a large white marble bath-tub, with its rim sunk to the level of the floor, and with three white marble steps leading down into it. This tub is full of water which is as clear as crystal, and is tempered to 28° Reaumur, (about 95° Fahrenheit.) Sunk into the floor, by the tub, is a covered copper box which contains some warm towels and a sheet. You look fully as white as an angel when you are stretched out in that limpid bath. You remain in it ten minutes, the first time, and afterwards increase the duration from day to day, till you reach twenty-five or thirty minutes. There you stop. The appoint-ments of the place are so luxurious, the benefit so marked, the price so moderate, and the insults so sure, that you very soon find yourself adoring the Friederichabad and infesting it. We had a plain, simple, unpretending, good hotel, in Baden-Baden—the Hotel de France—and alongside my room I had a giggling, eackling, chattering family who always went to bed just two hours after me, and always got up just two hours ahead of cleven and get up long before eight. The partitions convey sound like a drum-head, and everybody knows it; but no matter, a German family who are all kindness and consideration in the daytime make apparently uo effort to moderate their noises for your benefit at night. They will sing, laugh and talk loudly, and bang furniture around in the most pitiless way, "If you knock on your wall appealingly, they will quiet down and discuss the matter softly amongst them-selves for a moment—then, like the mice, they fall to persecuting you again, and as vigorously as before. They keep cruelly late and early hours, for such noisy folk.

Of course when one begins to find fault with foreign people's ways, he is very likely to get a reminder to look nearer home, before he gets far with it. I open my note book to see if I can find some more information of a valual le nature about Baden Baden. and the first thing I fall upon is this :

Baden-Baden, (no date.) Lot of vociferous Americans at breakfast this morning. Talking at everybody, while pretending to talk among themselves. On their first travels, manifestly. Showing off. The naual signs—airy, easy-going references to grand distances and foreign places. 'Well, good bye, old fellow—if I don't run across you in Italy, you hunt me up in London before you sail.'

The next item which I find in my notebook is this one:

The fact that a band of 6,000 Indians are now murdering our frontieramen at their impudent leisure, and that we ree only able to send 1,200 soldiers again t hem, is utilized here to discourage emigration to America, The common people think the Indians are in New Jersey.

This is a new and peculiar argument against keeping our army down to a ridiculous figure in the matter of numbers. It is rathera striking one, too. I have not distorted the truth in saying that the facts in the above item, about the army and the Indians, are made use of to discourage emigration to America. That the common people should be rather foggy in their geography, and foggy as to the location of the Indians, is matter for amusement, may be, but not of aurprise.

There is an interesting old cemetery in Baden Baden, and we spent several pleasant hours in wandering through it and spelling out the inscriptions on the sged tombstones. Apparently after a man has lain there a century or two, and has had a good many people buried on top of him, it is considered that this tombetone is not needed by him me. But that is common in German hotels; any longer. I judge so from the fact that the people generally go to bed long after hundreds of old gravestones have been removed from the graves and placed against the inner walls—of the cometers. What artists they had in the old times! They obiseled angels and chernes and devils and akeletons on the tombstones in the most lavish and generous way,—as to supply,—but curiously grotesque and outlandirh as to form. It is not always easy to tells which of the figures belong among the bleat and which of them among the opposite party. But there was an inscription, in French, on one of those old stones which was quaint and pretty, and was plainly not the work of any other than a poet. It was to this effect;

HERE

REPOSES IN GOD.

CAROLINE DE CLERY,

A RELIGIEUSE OF ST. DENIS,

AGED 83 YEARS—AND BLIND,

THE LIGHT WAS RESTORED TO, HER IN BADEN THE 5TH OF JANUARY, 1839.

We made several excursions on foot to the neighbouring villages, over winding and beautiful roads and through enchanting woodland scenery. The woods and roads were similar to those at Heidelberg, but not so bewitching. I suppose that roads and woods which are up to the Heidelberg mark are rare in the world.

Once we wandered clear away to La Favorita Palace, which is several miles from Baden-Baden. The grounds about the palace were fine; the palace was a curiosity. It was built by a Margravine in 1725, and remains as she left it at her death. We wandered through a great many of its rooms, and they all had striking peculiarities of decoration. For instance, the walls of one room were pretty completely covered with small pictures of the Margravine in all conceivable varieties of fanciful costumes, some of them male.

The walls of another room were covered with grotesquely and elaboraterly figured hand-wrought topestry. The musty ancient beds remained in the chambers, and their quitte and curtains and canopies were decorated with curious hand-work, and the walls and ceilings frestoed with his torical and mythological scenes in glaring colours. There was enough crazy and rotten rubbish in the building to make the true bric a-bracer green, with envy. A painting in the dining hall verged upon the indelicate—but then the Margravine was herself a triffe indelicate.

It is in every way a wildly and picturecounty decorated thouse, and brimful of interest as a reflection of the character and tastes of that rude bygone time.

In the grounds, a few rods from the palace, stands the Margravine's chapel just as she left it—a parse wooden structure, wholly barren of croament. It is said that the Margravine would give herself up to debauchery and exceedingly fast living for several months at a time, and then retire to this miserable wooden den and spend a few months in repenting and getting ready for another good time. She was a devoted Catholic, and was perhape quite a model sort of a Christian as Christians went then, in high life, Tradition says she spent the last two years of her life in the strange den I have been speaking of, after having indulged herself in one final, triumphant and satisfying spree. She shut herself up there, without company, and without even a servant, and so abjured and forsook the world. In her little bit of a kitchen she did her own cooking; she wore a hair shirt next the skin, and castigated herself with whips—there sids to grace are exhibited there yet. She prayed and told her heads, in another little room before a waxen virgin niched in a little box against the wall; she bedded herself like a slave.

In another small room is an unpainted wooden table, and behind it sit half-life-size waxen figures of the Holy Family, made by the very worst artist that ever lived, perhaps, and clothed in gaudy, flimsy drapery.* The Margravine used to bring her meals to this table and dine with the Holy Family. What an idea that was! What a grisly spectacle it must have been! Imagine it. Those rigid, shock-headed figures, with corpsy complexions and fishy glass eyes, occupying one side of the table in the constrained attitudes and dead endess that distinguish all men that are born of wax, and this wrinkled, smouldering old fire-enter occupying the other side, mumbling her prayers and munching or sausages in the ghostly stillness and shadowy indistinctness of a winter twilight. It makes one feel crawly even to think of it.

In this sordid place, and clothed, bedded and fed like a pauper, this strange princess lived and worshipped during two years, and in it she died. Two or three hundred years ago, this would have made the poor den hely ground; and the church would have set up a miracle-factory there and made plenty of money out of it. The den could be moved into some portions of France and made a good property even now.

those which teelin ment boyis spicu mete tire carrier wood grant strain is his most foot !

whe burn encl light is all fuses age.

oaye

mad

aup tim vili

where cil

or ah ni bi

&quot;The Saviour was represented as a lad of about 15 years of age. This figure had lost one ave.

racter and

the palace st as she re, wholly ebauchery tal months miserable he in rether good c, and was ristian as two years have been herself in ng spree. abjured le bit of a she wore gated here are exd told her a waxen the wall:

unpainted f-life-size made by ved, perdrapery, * meals to Family. a grisly

s, with 0yes, octhe concon that wax, and ster ocr prayers ghostly as of a bedded princess ars, and d years poor ohurch factory of it.

orawly

tions of on now.

lad of

tarreme this CHAPTER XXIII DVest Manus

From Baden Baden we made the outtom-sry trip into the Black Forest. We were on foot most of the time. One cannot describe those noble woods, nor the feeling with which they inspire him. A feeture of the feeling, however, is a deep sente of contentment; another feature of it is a buoyant, boyish gladness; and a third and very conspicuous feature of it is one's sense of the remeteness of the work-day world and his en-tire emancipation from it and its affairs.

Those woods stretch aborden over a vast region; and every where they are such dense woods, and so sill, and so piney and fra-grant. The stems of the trees are trim and straight, and in many places all the ground is hidden for miles under a thick cushion of mose of a vivid green colour, with not a deoayed or ragged spot in its surface, and not a fallen leaf or broken twig to mar its im-manulate tidines. A rich dathedral gloom pervades the pillared aisles; so the stray flecks of sunlight that strike a trunk here and a bough yonder are strongly accented, and when they strike the most they fairly seem to buth. But the weirdest effect, and the inoat enchanting, is that produced by the diffused light of the low afternoon and ; no single ray is able to pierce its way in then, but the dif-fused light takes colour from most and foliage, and pervades the place like a faint, green-tinted mist, the theatrical fire of fairyland. The suggestion of mystery and the supersatural which haunts the forest at all times, is intensified by this unearthly glow. ... We found the Black Forest farm houses and villages all that the Black Forest stories have pictured them. The first genuine specimen which we came upon was the maneon of a rich farmer and member of the common council of the parish or district. He was an important personage in the land and so was his wife also, of course. His daughter was the 'catch' of the region, and she may be already entering into immortality as the hereine of one of Auerbach's novel for all I know. We shall see, for if he puts her in I shall recognize her by her Black Forest clothes, and her burned complexion, her plump figure, her fat hands, her dull expression, her gentle spirit, her generous feet, her bonnetless head, and the plaited tails of hemp-coloured hair hanging down her back.

The house was big enough for a hotel; it was a hundred feet long and fifty wide, and ten feet high, from ground to eaves; but from the eves to the comb of the mighty roof was as much as forty feet, or maybe even more. This roof was of ancient mind coloured straw thatch a foot thick, and was covered all over except a few trifling spots, with a thriving and luxurious growth of green vegetation, mainly moss. The mossless spots were places where repairs, had been made, by the insertion, of, bright new masses of yallow straw. The caves projected, far down, like their. If, hospitable wings. Across the gable that fronted the road, and about ten feet above the ground ran a narrow porch, with a wooden railing; a row of small windows filled with very small passes looked updows filled with very small panes looked up-on the porch. Above were two or three other little windows, one clear up under the sharp apex of the roof. Before the ground-floor door was a huge pile of manure. The door of a second-storey room on the side of the house was open, and occupied by the rear elevation of a cow. Was this probably the drawing-room? All of the front half of the house from the ground up seemed to be occupied by the people, the cows and the chickens, and all the rear half by draught actimals and hay. But the chief teature all around this house was the big heaps of manners.

We became very familiar with the fertilizer in the Forest. We fell unconclously into the habit of judging of a man's station in life by this outward and eloquent sign. Some-times we said. Here is a poor devil, that is manifest. When we saw a stately accumulation we said, 'Here is a banker,' When we encountered a country seat surrounded by an Alpine pemp of manure, we said, Doubtless a Duke lives here.

The importance of this feature has not been properly magnified in the Black Forest stories. Manure is evidently the Black For-ester's main tressure—his coin—his jewel, his pride, his Old Master, his kermica, his bric-a-brac, his darling, his title to public consideration, envy, veneration, and his first solicitude when he gets ready to make his will. The true Black Forest novel, if it is ever written, will be skeletoned womewhat in this way :

S KELETONS FOR BLACK FOREST NOVEL

Rich old farmer, named Huss. Has in-herited great wealth of manure, and by diligence has added to it. It is doubled-starred in Baedeker. The Black Forest artist paints it—his masterpiece. The king comes to see it. Gretchen Huss, daughter and heiress. Paul Roch, young neighbour, suitor for Gretchen's hand—ostensibly; he really wants the manure. Hoch has a good many cart-loads of the Black Forest currency himself, and therefore is a good catch; but he is sordid, mean, and without sentiment, whereas Gretchen is all sentiment, and poetry. Hans Schmidt, young neigh-bour, full of sentiment, full of poetry, loves Gretchen, Oretchen loves him. But he has no manure. Old Huss ferbids him the house Old Huss forbids him the house. manure. His teart breaks, he goes away to die in the woods, far from the oruel world—for he says bitterly, "What is man, without manbitterly,

* When Bucker's guid books mention a thing and put two stars . * after it, it means "well worth viliting." M. T.

Interval of six months.]

Paul Hook comes to old Huss and says, 'I am at last as rich as you required. Come and view the pile. Old Huss views it and says, 'It is sufficient—take her and be happy —meaning Gretchen.

[Interval of two weeks.]

happy — meaning Gretchen.

[Interval of two weeks.]

Wedding party assembled in old Huss's drawing room; Hoch placid and content, Gretchen weeping over her hard fate. Enter old Huss's head bookkeeper. Huss says fiercely, I gave you three weeks to find out why your books don't balance, and to prove that you are not a defaulter; the time is a manifely mather missing property or you go unat you are not a defaulter; the time is up—ind me the missing property or you go to prison as a thief. Bookkeeper; I have found it. Where ! Bookkeeper; ternly—tragically—'In the bridegroom's pile!—behold the thief—see nim blench and tremble! [Sensation.] Paul Hoch: 'Lost, lost!—falls over the cow in a swoon and is handsuffed, Gretchen: Saved!' Lost, lost !'—falls over the cow in a awoon and is handcuffed. Gretchen: 'Saved!' Falls over the calf in a awoon of joy, but is caught in the arms of Hana Schmidt, who springs in at that moment. Old Huss: 'What, you here, variet! unhand the maid and quit the place.' Hans: still supporting the insensible girl: Never! Cruel old man, the true that I come with claims which aver your that I come with claims which a well with the come with claims which a come with claims which are come in the calf in the know that I come with claims which even you cannot despise.

Huss: 'What, you! name them.' Hans: 'Then listen.' The world had forsaken me. I forsook the world. I wandered in the solitude of the forest, longing for death and finding none. I fed upon roots, and in my bitterness I dug for the bitterest, loathing the sweeter kind. Digging, three days agone, I struck a manure mine! A Golconda, a limitless Bonanza, of solid manure! I can buy you all, and have mountain ranges of manure left! Ha ha, now thou smilest a smile! [Immense sensation,] Exhibition of specimens from the Exhibition of specimens from the mine, Old Huss, enthusiastically: Wake her up, shake her up, noble young man, she is yours! Wedding takes place on the spot; bookkeeper restored to his office and emoluments; Paul Hoch led off to jail. The Bonanza king of the Black Forest lives to a good old age, blessed with the love of his wife and his twenty-seven children, and the still swester envy of everybody around.

We took our noon meal of fried trout one day at the Plow Ling in a very pretty village, (Ottenhofen) and then went into the public room to rest and smoke. There we found nine or ten Black Forest grandess assembled around a table. They were the Common Council of the parish. They had gathered there at sight colock that morning to elect a new member, and they, had now been drinking beer four bours at the new member's expense. They were men of fifty or sixty years of age, with grave good-natured faces, and were all dressed in the coature made familiar to us by the Black Forest scories; broad, round-topped black, felt, hats with the brims carled up all round; iong, red waistcoats with la ge metal buttone, black alpaca coats with the waista up between the shoulders. There were no speeches there was but little talk, there were no frivolitica; the Council filled, themselves gradually, steadily, but surely, with beer, and conducted themselves with sedate decorum, as became men of position, men of influence, men of manure.

We had a hot afternoon tramp up the valley, along the grassy bank of a rushing stream of clear water, past farm houses, water mills, and no end of wayside crucifixes and saints and Virgins. These crucifixes, etc., are set up in memory of deported friends by survivors, and are almost as frequent as tolegraph poles are in other lands.

We followed the carriage road, and had our usual luck: we travelled under a beating sun, and always saw the shade leave the shady places before we could get to them. In all our wanderings we seldom managed to strike a piece of road at its time for being shady. We had a particularly bot time of it on that particular afternoon, and with no comfort out what we could get out of the fact that the peasants at work away up on the steep mountain sides abuve our heads were even worse off than we were. By and by it became impossible to endure the intolerable glare and heat any longer; so we struck across the ravine and entered the deep cool twilight of the forer, to hunt for what the guide book called the 'old road,' and state if

We found an old road, and it proved eventually to be the right one, though we followed it at the time with the conviction that it was the wrong one. . If it was the wrong one there could be no use in hurrying, therefore we did not hurry, but sat down frequently on the soft mose and enjoyed the restful quiet and shade of the forest solitudes. There had been distractions in the carriage road school children, peasants, waggons, troops of many when and I that a den COULT derfu Edep about be all am p Ladn hards when head He g and No know three it. + it in no so it is to be to ta the. WAL not. heat feto pedes many

Non found

ing to

to me mast

> his a m sno the goe tion him and WO wh WO He

ing

drag on t

10 th at or

ste

till awester

1 trout one pretty vil-There we y were, the They had at morning to had now at the new en of tilty good-naturhe coatume Furest scofelt hats tone, black etween the ches there frivolities : gradually. d conductrum, as be-p the vala rushing m houses, s crucifixes, ted friends requant as uence, men

d, and had or a beatleave the
to them.
I managed for being to with no
ut of the
up on the eads were
and by is ntolerable

we struck

deep ocol

what the

eventualowed it at t was the ne there efore we tently on ful quiet t. There to road troops of pedestrianizing students from all over Germany but we had the old road all to ourselves arise to see the pedestrial in a most

Now and then, while we rested, we watched the labourious ant at his work. I found nothing new in him—certainly nothing to change my opinion of him. It seems to me that in the matter of into icot, the aut must be a strangely overrated bird. During many summers, now, I have watched him, when I ought to have been to better business, and I have not yet some across a living ant that seemed to have; any, zore seese tuan a dead one. I refer to the ordinary ant, of course; I had no experience of those, won-derful Swiss and African ones, which vote, keep drilled armies; hold slaves, and dispute about religion. Those particular ants may be all that the naturalist paints them, but I am persuaded that the average ant is a sham. I admit his industry, of course : he is the hardest working creature in the world-when anybody is looking but his leatherheadedness is the point I make against him. He goes cut foraging, he makes a capture, and then what does he do to Go home? No he goes anywhere but home. He doesn't know where home is. His home may be only three feet away—no matter, he can't find it. He makes his capture, as I have said; it is generally something which can be of no sort of use to himself or anybody else; it is usually seven times bigger than it ought to be; he hunts out the awkwardest place to take hold of it; he lifts it bodily up in the air by main force, and starts; not to-ward home, but in the opposite direction; not calmly and wisely, but, with a frantio haste which is wasteful of his strength; he fetches up against a pebble, instead of go-ing round it, he climbs over it backwards dragging his booty after him, tumbles down on the other side, jumps up in a passion, kicks the dust off his clothes, moistens his inds, grabe his property viciously, yanks it his way, then that, shoves it shead of him a moment, turns tail and lugs, it after him another moment, gets madder and madder, then prezently hoists it into the air and goes tearing away in an antirely new direction; comes to a weed; it never occurs to him to go round it; no, he must climb it; and he does climb it, dragging his worthless property to the top-which is as bright a thing to do as it would be for me to carry a sack of flour from Heidelberg to Paris by way of Staaburg steeple; when he gets up there he finds that that is not the place; takes a cursory glance at the scenery and either climbs down again or tumbles down, and starts off once more—as usual, in a new direction. At the end of balfanhour, he fetches no within six inches of the place he started from and lays his burden down; meantime he has been over all the ground for two yards around, and; climbed all the weeds and pebbles he came across. Now he wipes the sweat from his brow, strokes his limbs, and; then marches aimlessive, off, in as violent a hurry, as ever. He traverses a good deal of zig zag country, and by and by sumbles on his ame booty again. He does not remember to have ever seen it before; he looks around to see which is not the way home, and grabs his bundle and starts; he goes through the same adventures he had before; finally stops, to rest, and a triend comes along. Evidently the friend remarks that a last year's grasshopper leg is a very noble acquisition, and inquires where he got it. Evidently the proprietor does not remember exactly where he did get it, but he thinks he got it is around here somewhere. Evidently the friend contracts to help him freight it, home. Then, with judgment peculiarly antic (pun not intractional), they take hold of opposite ends of that grasshopper's leg and begin to tug with all their might in opposite directions. Presently they take a rest and confer together. They decide that, something is wrong, they can't make out what. Then they go at it, again, just as before. Same result. Mutual recriminations follow. Evidently each accuses the other of being an obstructionist. They warm up, and the dispute ends in a fight. They lock themselves gether and chew each other's jaws for a while; then they roll and tumble on the ground till one loses a horn or a leg and has to haul off for/repairs. They make up and go to work again in the same old insane way, but the crippled ant is at a disadvantage; tug as he may, the other one drags off the booty and him at the end of it. Instead of giving up, he hangs on, and gets his shins bruised against every obstruction that comes in the way. By and by, when that grasu-hopper's leg has been dragged all over the same old ground once more, it is finally dumped at about the apot where it originally lay, the two perspiring anta inspect it thoughtfully, and decide that dried grasshopper legs are a poor sort of property after all, and then each starts off in a different direction to see if he can't find an old nail or something else that is heavy enough to afford entertainment, and at the same time valueless enough to make an ant want to own it.

There in the Black Forest, on the mountain side, I saw an ant go through with such a performance as this with a dead spider of fully ten times his own weight. The spider vas not quite dead, but too far gone to resist. He had a cound body the size of a pea. The little an observing that I was no long—urned him on his back, sunk his fangs into his throat, lifted him into the air and started vigorously off with him; stumbling over little pebbles, "sping on the spider's legs and tripping maself up, dragging him backwards, shoving him bodily shead, dragging him up stones six inches afgh instead of going around them, climbing weeds twenty times his own height and jumping from their summite—and finally leaving him in the middle of the road to be confiscated by any fool of an ant that wanted him. I measured the ground which this ass traversed, and arrived at the conclusion that what he had accomplished inside of twenty minutes would constitute some such job as this—relatively speaking—for a man; to wit: to strap two eight hundred pound horses together, carry them eighteen hundred feet, mainly over (not around) bowlders averaging six feet high, and in the course of the journey climb up and jump from the top of one precipice like Niagara, and three steeples, each a hundred and twenty feet high; and then put the horses down, in an exposed place, without anybody to watch them, and go off to indulge in some other idiotic miracle for vanity's eake.

Science has recently discovered that the ant does not lay up anything for winter use. This will knock him out of literature, to some extent. He does not work, except when people are looking, and only then when the observer has a green, naturalistic look, and seems to be taking notes. This amounts to deception, and will injure him for the Sunday schools. He has not judg-ment enough to know what is good to eat from what isn't. This amounts to ignorance, and will impair the world's respect for him. He cannot stroll around a stump and find his way home again. This amounts to i liotoy, and once the damaging fact is established, thoughtful people will cease to look upon him, the sentimental will cease to fondle him. His vaunted industry is but a vanity of no effect, since he never gets home with anything he starts with. This disposes of the last remnant of his reputation and wholly destroys his main usefulness as a moral agent, since it will make the singgard hesitate to go to him any more. It is strange beyond comprehension, that so manifest a humbug as the ant has been able to fool so many nations and keep it up so many ages and not be found out.

The ant is strong, but we saw another strong thing, where we had not suspected the presence of much muscular power before.

A toadstool—that vogetable which springs to full growth in a slight inght—had torn loose and lifted smatted mass of pine needles and dirt of twice its own bulk into the air, and supported it there like a column supporting a shed. Ten thousand toadstools, with the right purchase, could lift a man, I suppose. But what good would it do?

Ail our atternoon's progress had been up hill, "About five or half-past we reached the

All our afternoon's progress had been up hill. "About five or half-past we reached the summit, and all of a sudden the descentiation of the forest parted, and we looked down into a deep and beautiful gorge, and out over a wide panorama of wooded mountains with their summits shining in the sun and their place-furnowed sides dimmed with purple shade. The gorge under our fest—salled All-shelligen—afforded room in the grassy level at its head for a cosy and delightful numan nest, that sway from the world and its botherations, and consequently the monkt of the old times had not failed to spy it out; and here were the brown and comely ruins of their obtroch and convent to prove that priests had as fine an instinct seven handred years ago in ferreting out the cholest nocks and corners in the land as stolests have to day.

A big hotel crowds the ruins a little, now, and drives a brisk trade with summer tourists. We descended into the gorge and had a supper which would have been very satisfactory if the trout had not been boiled. The Germans are pretty sure to boil a trout or anything else if left to their own devices. This is an argument of their own devices. They shook their heads and said:

" Baked, they were tough; and even boiled they waren't things for a hungry man to hanker after."

We went down the glen after suppor. It is beautiful—a mixture of sylvan leveliness and oraggy wildness. A limpid torrent goes whistling down the glen, and toward the foot of it winds through a narrow eleft between lefty precipioes and hurls it over a succession of falls. After one passes the last of these he has a backward glimpse at the falls which is very pleasing—they rise in a seven stepped stairway of feamy and glittering cascades, and make a picture which is as charming as it is unusual.

we we need to the stride, and the stride, drawing in dwe mig but wa and the Now not lie not lie but in time the keep the active are go solous eye an pleasur matter some thetic And couple the co no con in ord peggir some. during that r glad. Were weild up his while man have instead should that that copy print book hamile belief men have Ti said toot that

CHAPTER XXIII. Godget word

which springs the had torn f pine needles t into the air.

d toadstools

d it do?

lift a man, I had been up re reached the he dense curlooked down

puntains with oun and their with purple feet—valled n the grassy

he world and quently the failed to spy

n and comely

vent to prove

natinot seven ing out the

the land as a little, now,

ummer tourorge and had

n very satis-

been boiled.

boil a trout

own devices.

acia support

the original

the coast of

ith "oranges

dande a few

se rendered

noe that he

tey wanted.

they liked

and even hungry man

supper. It

u loveliness

pid torrent

and toward arrow cleft

le it over a

ses the last

apse at the y rise in a

ind glitter. which is as

Walt a La

and said :

We were satisfied that we could walk to Openau in one day, now that we were in pracice: so we set out next morning after breakfast determined to do it. It was all the way down hill, and we had the lovellest summer weather for it. So we set the pedometer, weather for it. So we set the pedometer, and then etretched away on an easy, regular stride, down through the cloven forcet, drawing in the fragrant breath of the morning in deep refreshing draughts, and wishing we might never have anything to do forever but walk to Coppensia and keep on doing it and then doing it over again.

Now the true charm of pedestrianism does not lie in the walking, or in the scenery, but in the talking. The walking is good to time the movement of the tongue by, and these the blood and the brain stirred up and active; the scenery and the words amella active; the scenery and the wordy smells are good to bear in upon a man an unconscious and unobtrusive charm and solace to eye and soul and eense; but the supreme pleasure comes from the talk. It is no matter whether one talks wisdom or nonsense, the case is the same, the bulk of the enjoyment lies in the wagging of the gladsome jaw and the flapping of the sympa-thetic ear.

And what a motley variety of subjects a couple of people will casually rake over in the course of a day's tramp! There being no constraint, a change of subject is always in order, and so a body is not likely to keep pegging at a single topic until it grows tire-some. We discussed everything we knew, during the first tifteen or twenty minutes, that moring, and then branched out into the glad, free, boundless realm of the things we were not certain about.

Harris said that if the best writer in the world once got the slovedly babit of doubling up his "have's" he could never get rid of it while he lived. That is to say if a man gets the habit of saying, 'I should have liked to have known more about it. instead of saying simply and sensibly, 'I should have liked to know more about it, tnat man's disease is incurable. Harris said that this sort of lapse is to be found in every copy of every newspaper that has ever been printed in English, and in al nost all of our books. He said he had observed it in Kirkham's grammar and in Macaulay. Harris believed that milk-teeth are commoner in men's mouths than those 'doubled-up have's.

That changed the subject to dentistry. I said I believed the average man dreaded tooth pulling more than amputation, and that he would yell quicker under the former operation than he would under the latter. The philosopher Havris said that the average man would not yell in either case if he had an audience. Then he continued :- ' ' When out brigade first went into camp when our brigate his went into camp on the Potomac, we used to be brought up standing, "becambing," by an' ear splitting howl of a grish. That meant that a soldier was getting a tooth "pulled in a tent. But the surgeons soon shanged that; they instituted open air dentists. tuted open air dentistry. There never was a howl afterwards that is, from the man who was having the tooth pulled. At the daily dental hour there would always be about five hundred soldiers gathered together thin the that neigh bourhood of that dental chair waiting to the performance—and help; and the moment the surgeon took a grip on the candidate's tooth and began to hit, every one of those five hundred rescale would clap his hand to his jaw and begin to hop around on one leg and howl with all the lungs he had I'll was enough to raise your hair to hear that varie-gated and enormous unanimous eaterwall burst out 1 With so big and so derisive an audience as that, a sufferer wouldn't emit's sound though you pulled his head off. "The surgeons said that pretty often a patient was compelled to augh, in the midst of his range, but that they never caught one crying out, after the open-air exhibition was instituted."

Dental surgeons suggested doctors, doctors suggested death, death au gested skeletons -and so, by a logical process the conversation melted out of one of these unbjects and into the next, until the topic of skeletons raised up Nicodemus Dodge out of the deep grave in my memory where he had lain buried and forgotten for twenty five years. When I was a boy in a printing office in Missouri, a loose jointed, long-leaged, toheaded, jeans-olad, countrified oub of about sixteen lounged in one day, and without removing his hands from the depths of his trousers pockets or taking off his faded ruin of a slouch hat, whose broken brim hung limp and ragged about his eyes and ears like a bug-eaten cabbage leaf, stared indifferently around, then leaned his hip against the editor's table, crossed his mighty brogans, aimed at a distant fly from a crevice in his upper teeth, laid him low, and said with composure, Whar's the boss? 'I am the boss," said the editor, following

* I do not know that there have not been moments in the course of the press it sees for when I should have been very g ad to have accepted the proposal of my noble friend, and to have exchanged par a in some of our evenings of wr.rk. [From a Speech of the English Chancelor of the Exchequer, August, 1879.]

this curious bit of architecture wonderingly along up to its clock-face with his eye.

! Dou't want anyhody fur to learn the business, 't ain't likely ?

learn it ?

Pap's so po' he can't run me no mo,' so I want to git a show somers if I kin, 'tain's no diffunce what, -I'm strong and hearty, and I don't turn my back on no kind of work, hard

1. Do you think you would like to learn the printing business? learn, so's I git a change fur to make my way. I'd jist as soon learn, print'n's anything, mistage winds astrony a strain of the thing.

trinumes a statistic for an wall or

Not good enough to keep store, I don't reakon, but up as fur as twelve-times-twelve I sin't no slouch. 'Tother side of that is what gits me.' el . Par Tr bigs

Where is your home? har a description of the What's your father's religious denomination !

'Him? Q, he'c a blacksmith.'

No, no, -I don't mean his trade. What's his religious denomination?'

O, -I didn't understand you befo'. He's a Freemason."

'No no, you don't get my mosning yet. What I mean is, does he belong to any church ?

Now you're talkin'! Couldn't make out what you was a tryin' to git through yo'h ad no way. B'icng to a church! Why, boss, he's been the pizenest kind of a Freewill Baptis' for forty year. They ain't no pizener ones 'n' what he is Mighty good man, pap is. Everybody says that, If they said any diffrant they wouldn't say it whar I was .- not much they wouldn't had cont

'What is your religion ?'

'Well, boss, you've kind o' got me thar,— and yit you hain't got me so mighty much, nuther. I think'l if a feller he'ps another feller when he's in trouble; and don't cuss, and don't do no mean things, nur noth'n' he ain' no business to do, and don't spell the Saviour's name with a little g, he sin't runnin' no resks, -he's about as saift as if he b'longed to a church.

But suppose he did spell it with a little

-what then ?'

Well, if ne done it a purpose, I reckon he wouldn't stand no chance, -he oughtn't to have no chance, anyway, I'm most rotten certain bout that.

What is your name?

I think may be you'll do, Nicedemus.
We'll give you a trial, anyway,
'All right.'
'When would you like to begin ?

So, within ten minutes after we had first glimpsed this nondescript, he was one of us, and with his cost off and hard at it.

Beyond that end of our establishment which was furthest from the etreet, was a which was furthest and thickly deserted garden, pathless, and thickly grown with the bloomy and villainous 'jimpson' weed and its common friend the stately sunflower. In the midst of this mournful spot was a decayed and aged little 'frame' house with but one room, one window and no ceiling,—it had been a smoke house a generation before. Nicodemus was given this longly and cheatly den. as a bad given this lonely and ghostly den as a bed chamber.

The village smarties reonguized a treasure in Nicodemus right away,—a butt to play jokes on. It was easy to see that he was inconceivably green and contiding. George Jones had the glory of perpetrating the first joke on him; he gave him a cigar with a dre-oracker in it, and winked to the crowd to come; the thing exploded presently and awept away the bulk of Nicodemus eyebrows and eyelashes. He simply said,-

'I consider them kind of seegyars dangersome, —and seemed to suspect nothing. The next evening Nicodemus waylaid George and poured a bucket of ice water over him.

One day, while Nicodemus was in swimming, Tom McElroy, "tied" his clothes. Nicodemus made a bonfire of Tom's by way of retaliation.

A third joke was played upon Nicodemus, a day or two later—he walked up the middle aisle of the village church, Sunday night, with a staring hand bill pinned between his shoulders. The joker spent the remainder of the night, after church, in the cellar of a deserted house, and Nicolemus sat on the cellar door till toward breakfast time to make sure that the prisoner remembered that if any noise was made, some rough treatment would be the consequence. The cellar had two feet of stagnant water in it, and was bottomed with aix inches of soft

But I wander from the point. It was the subject of skeletons that brought this buy back to my recollection. Before a very long time had elapsed, the village smarties began to feel an uncomfortable consciousness of not heir at thelby. nhary. 761040. when, he death, do it. skaletor Jimmy piece of Jimmy dollars, Jimmy night: had gon siderabl in the a my Fin This -midn > den. in. T his h and n and W he was lay a marble & Well and a had so for th sult ! Jus

ing ste

and an

of for glano men i looki objec steep way, and to de come skelet

that read which of it rate ladd roof the most rotten

Nicodemus.

gin fled a not

we had first

cetablishment atreet, was a aud thickly and villainous on friend the nides of this and aged little om, one win-een a smoke-icodemus was len as a bed sed a treasure butt to play hat he was in. ing. George ing. George ar with a fireresently and demus's eye-ly said,— of seeg yars to suspect Nicodemus bucket of Nicodemus vas in swim. his clothes.

om's by way Nicodemus, the middle nday night, between his e remainder cellar of a sat on the emembered oine rough vater in it,

It was the t this buy very long ties began iess of nut es of suit

having made a very shiping success out of heir attempts on the simpleton from "old Shelby." Experimenters grew scarce and chary. Now the young doctor came to the resone. There was delight and applause when he proposed to scare Nicodemus to death, and explained how he was going to do it. He had a noble new skeleton—the skeleton of the late and only local celebrity, skeleton of the late and only local celebrity, Jimmy Finn, the village drunks d—a griely piece of property which he had Jought from Jimny, Finn himself, at auction, for fifty dollars, under great competition, when Jimmy lay very sick in the tan-yard a fortnight before his death. The fifty dollars had gone promptly for whickey and had considerably hurried up the change of ownership in the skeleton. The doctor would put Jimmy Finn's sk leton in Nicodemua's bed l.

This was done—about half-past ten in the

in the skeleton. The doctor would put Jimmy Fina's sk leton in Nicodemus's hed!

This was done—about half past ten in the evening. About Nicodemus' usual bedtime—midnight—the village jokers came creeping stealthily through the jimpeon weeds and sunflowers towards, the lonely frame den. They reached the window and pesped in. There sat the long-legged pauper, on his bed, in a very short shirt, and nuthing more; he was dangling his legs contentedly back, and forth, and wheezing the music of "Camptown Races" out of a paper-overlaid comb which he was pressing against his mouth; by him lay a new Jewsharp, a new top, a solid india-rubber ball, a handful of painted marbles, five pounds of "store" candy, and a well-guawed alab of gingerbread as big and as thick as a volume of sheet music. He had sold the skeleton to a travelling quack for three dollars, and was enjoying the result!

sult!

Just as we had finished talking about skeletons and were drifting into the subject of fossils, Harris and I heard a shout, and glanced up the steep hillside. We saw men and women standing away up there looking frightened, and there was a bulky object tumbling and finindering down the steep slope towards us. We got out of the way, and when the object landed in the road it proved to be a boy. He had tripped and fallen, and there was nothing for him to do but trust to luck and take what might come.

When one starts to roll down a hill like that there is no stopping till the bettom is reached. Think of people farming on a slant which is so steep that the best you can say of it,—if you want to be fastidiously accurate,—is, that it is a little steeper than a ladder and not quite so steep as a manuard roof. But that is what they do. Some of the little farms on the hillside opposite

Heidelberg were stood up "sidgeways."
The boy was wonderfully joited up, and his head was bleeding from outs which it had got from small stopies on the way.

Harris and I gathered him up, and set him on a stone, and by that time the men and women had sampered down and brought his cap.

Men, women and children flooked out Men, women and children flocked out from neighbouring cottages and joined the crowd; the pale boy was petted, and stared at, and commisserated, and water was brought for him to driak, and bathe his bruises in. And such another clatter of tongnes! All who had seen the catastrophe were describing it as couce, and each trying to talk louder than his neighbour; and one youth of a superfor gentle ran a little way up the hin, estied attention, tripped, fell, rolled down amount in, and thus triumphantly showed exactly how the thing had been done.

Harris and I were included in all the descriptions; how we were coming along thow

Harris and I were included in all the de-criptions; how we were coming along; how Hans Gross shoused; how we looked up startled; how we saw Peter coming like a cannon-shot; how judiciously we got out of the way, and let him come; and with what presence of mind we picked him ap, and brushed him off, and set him on a rock when the performance was over. We were as much heroes as saybody else, except Peter, and were so recognized; we were taken with Peter and the populace to Peter's mother's cottage, and there we at-bread and cheese, and drank milk and feer with everybody, and had a most sociable with everybody, and had a most sociable good time; and when we left we had a hand shake all around, and were receiving and shouting back Leb webl's until a turn in the road separated us from our cordial and kind. ly new friends forever.

We accomplished our undertaking. At half-past eight in the evening we stepped into Oppeneau, just eleven hours and a fast out from Allerheiligen, -146 miles. This is the distance by perlometer; the guide book and the Imperial Ordnance maps make it only ten and a quarter,—a surprising blunder, for these two authorities are neually singularly accurate in the matter of distancon, say then are on and count tou

CHAPTER XXIV. 31.11 03.1 035

That was a thoroughly satisfactory walk, and the only one we were ever to have which was all the way down hill. We took the train next morning and returned to Baden. Baden through fearful fogs of dust. Every seat was crowded, too; for it was Sunday, and consequently everybody was taking a "pleasure" exercion. Hot! the sky was an oven,—and a seem one, too, with no cracks in it to let in any air. An odd time for a pleasure exercise, estainly.

Sunday is the grant day, an the continent,—the free day, the happy day. One can break the Sabbath in a hundred ways without committing any sin.

We do not work on Sunday, because the commandment forbids it; the Germans do not work on Sunday, because the commandnot work on Sanday, because the command-ment forbids it. We rest on Sanday, because the commandment requires it; the Germans rest on Sanday, because the commandment requires is. But in the definition of the word rest lies all the difference. With us, its Sanday meaning is, stay in the house and keep still; with the Germans its Sanday and week-day meanings seem to be the same,— rest the tired part, and never mind the other parts of the frame; rest the tired part, and use the means best calculated to rest that particular part. Thus; If one's duties have kept him in the house all the week, it will rest him to be out on Sanday; if his duties have required him to read weighty and serious matter all the week, it will rest him serious matter all the week, it will rest him to read light matter on Sunday; if his occupation has busied him with death and funerals all the week, it will rest him to go to the theatre Sanday night and put in two or three hours laughing at a comedy; if he is tired with digging ditches or felling trees all the week, it will rest him to lie quiet in the house on Sunday; if the hand, the arm, the brain, the tongue, or any other member, is fatigued with inanition, it is not to be rested by adding a day's inanition; but if a member by adding a day's inanition; but if a member is fatigued with exertion, inanition is the right rest for it. Such is the way it which the Germans seem to define the word 'rest; that is to say, they rest a member by recreating, recuperating, restoring its forces. But our definition is less broad. We all rest alike on Sunday,—by secluding ourselves and keeping still, whether that is the surest way to rest the most of us or not. The Germans make the actors, the princhers, etc., work on Sunday. We encourage the preschers, the editors, the printers, etc., to work on Sunday and imagine that none of the sin of it falls upon us; but I do not know how we are going to get around not know how we are going to get around the fact that if it is wrong for the printer to work at his trade on Sunday it must be equally wrong for the preacher to work at his, since the commandment has made no exception in his favour. We buy Monday morning's paper and read it, and thus encourage Sunday-printing. But I shall never le it again.

The Germans remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, by abstaining from work, as commanded; we keep it holy by abstaining from work, as commanded, and by also abstaining from play, which is not commanded. Perhaps we constructively break the command to rest, because the resting we do is in most cases only a name, and not a fact.

These reasonings have sufficed, in a measure, to mend the rent in my conscience which I made by trayelling to Baden-Baden that Sunday. We arrived in time to furbian ap and get to the English church before the services began. We arrived in considerable style, too, for the landlord had ordered the first carriage that could be found, since there was no time to lose, and our cocchinan was so splendidly livered that we were probably mistaken for a brace of stray dukes; else why were we honoured with a pew all to ourselves, away up among the very elect at the left of the chancel? That was my first thought, In the pew directly in front of us at an aldered led. That was my first thought. In the pew directly in front of us at an elderly lady, plainly and cheaply dressed; at her side sat a young lady with a very sweet face, and she also was quite simply dressed; but around us and about us were clothes and jewels which it would do anybody's heart good to worship in.

I thought it was pretty manifest that the elderly lady was embarrassed at finding heraell in such a conspicuous place arrayed in such cheap apparel; I began to feel sorry for her and troubled about her. She tried for her and troubled about her. She tried to seem very busy with her prayer book and her responses, and unconscious that she was out of place, but I said to myself, "She is not aucoceding—there is a distressed tradulousness in her voice which betrays increasing embarrasment." Presently the Saviour's name was mentioned, and in her flurry she lost her head completely, and rose and curtisled, instead of making a slight nod as everybody else did. The sympathetic blood surged to my temples and I turned and gave the fine birds what I intended to be a bessecting look, but my feelings got the better of me and changed it into a look which said, "If any of you pets of fortune laugh at this poor soul, you will deserve to be flayed for it." Things went from bed to worse, and I shortly found myself mentally taking the unfriended lady under my proworse, and I shortly found myself mentally taking the unfriended lady under my protection. My mind was wholly upon her, I for out all about the sermion. Her embarrassment took stronger and stronger hold upon her; she got to snapping the lid of her amelling bottle—it made a loud sharp sound, but in her trouble she snapped and snapped way. Unconsiders of what the was delicated away, unconscious of what she was doing. The last extremity was reached when the allectio nte peo wenty before myself, hoard to pitying I did no but as t Let u but at see her and our

Then was the Noas I be started WAYS : straigh througher im -and boarde This Empre throug been > on my Baden Dever ohurc from . that tass allow atten Th gron Fr old I > knows

of th and lent mon nigh the ... wit ROM dis SW wh pa'

from work, it holy by nauded, and which is not pnstructively because the nly a name, d, in a meaconscience Baden Baden time to furohurch beived in cont oould be to lose, and lly liveried n for a brace we honoured y up among In the pew her side sas t face, and but clothes and ody's heart est that the finding herarrayed in feel sorry She tried ayer book as that she to myself. distressed h betrays ently the and in her etely, and ug a slight mpathetio I turned tended to elings got nto a look of fortune deserve to om had to mentally my proon her, I r embar. ger hold rp sound, snappeil w doing. vhen the collection-plate began its rounds; the mode rate people threw in people, the pobles and the rich contributed aliver, but she laid a twenty mark gold piece upon the book-reet before her with a sounding step ! I said to myself, 'She has parted with all her little heard to buy the consideration of these unpitying people—it is a sorrowful spectacle.' I did not venture to look sround this time; but as the service closed, I said to myself. but as the service closed, I said to myself, 'Let them laugh, it is their opportunity; but at the door of this church they shall see her step into our fine carriage with ur, and our gaudy coachman shall drive her

Then she rose—and all the congregation stood while she walked down the aide. She was the Empress of Germany!

No-she had not been so much embarrassed No she had not been so much emperassed as I had supposed. My imagination had got started on the wrong scent, and that is always hopeless; one is sure, then, to go straight on misinterpreting everything, clear through to the end. The young lady with her imperial Majesty was a maid of honour—and I had been taking her for one of her boarders, all the time.

This is the only time I have ever bad an Empress under my personal protection; and considering my inexperience, I wonder I got through with it so well. I should have been a little embarrasted myself if I had known rarlier what sort of a contract I had on my lands. We found that the Empress had been in Baden Baden several days. It is said that she never attends any, but the English form of church service. I lay abed and read and rested from my journey's fatigues the remainder of that Sunday, but I sent my agent to repre-sent me at the afternoon service, for I never allow anything to interfere with my habit of

There was a vast crowd in the public grounds that night to hear the band play the "Fremersberg." This piece tells one of the old legends of the region: how a great noble of the Middle Ages got lest in the mountains, and wandered about with his dogs in a violent storm, until at last the fait tones of a monastery bell, calling the monks to a miduight service, caught his ear, and he followed the direction the founds came from and was saved. A beautiful air ran through the music patterns. without ceasing, sometimes loud and strong, sometimes so soft that it could hardly be distinguished—but it was always there; it aways grandly along through the abrill whistling of the storm-wind, the rattling patter of the rain, and the boom and crash of the thunder; it wound soft and low through the lesser sounds, the distant ones, such as the throbbing of the convent bell, the melodious winding of the hunter's horn, the dis-treesed bayings of his dogs, and the solema chanting of the monks; it rose again, with a jubilant ring, and mingled itself, with the country songs and dances of the peasants, as-sembled in the convent hall to obser up the rescued huntaman while he ate his supper, The instruments imitated all these sounds with a marvellous exactness. More than with a marvellous exactness. More than one man started to raise his umbrelle when the storm burst forth and the sheets of mimio rain came driving by; it was hardly possible to keep from putting your hand to your hat when the floroe wind began, to rage and shrick; and it was not possible to refrain from starting when those sudden and charmingly real thunder crashes were let losse.

I suppose the Framersberg is very low-grade music; I know, indeed, that it must be low-grade music, because it so delighted me, warmed the moved me, stirred me, uplifted me, enraptured me, that I was full of my all the time, and mad with enthusiana. My soul had never had such a souring out since I was born. The solents and majestic chart-ing of the monks was not done by instru-ments, but by men's voices; and it rose and fell, and rose again in that rich confusion: of warring sounds, and pulsing bells, and the stately swing of that ever-present enchanting air, and it seemed to me that nothing but the very lowest of low grads music could be so divinely beautiful. The great crowd which the Fremersberg had called out was another evidence that it was low-grade music; for only the few are educated up to a point where high-grade music gives pleasure. I have never heard enough classic masic to be able to enjoy it. I dislike the opera because I want to love it and can't.

I suppose there are two kinds of musicone kind which one feels, just as an oyster might, and another sort which requires a higher faculty, a faculty; which must be assisted and developed by teaching. Yet if base, music gives certain of, us wings, why chould we want any other? But we do. We want it because the higher and better like it. But we want it without giving it the necessary time and trouble : so we climb. into the upper tier, that dress circle, by a lie: we rretend we like it. I know several of that sort of people—and I propose to be one of them myself when I get home with my fine European education.

And then there is painting. What a red rag is to a bull, Turner's 'Slave Ship' was to me, before I studied Art. Mr. Ruskin is educated in art up to a point where that picture throws him into as mad an ecstacy of pleasure as it used to throw me into one of rage, last year, when I was ignorant. His cultivation enables him and me, now to see water in that glaring, yellow mud, and natural effects in those lurid explosions of mixed smoke and flame, and orimson sunset glories; it reconciles him-and me, nowto the floating of iron cable-chains and other unfleatable things; it reconciles us to fishes swimming around on top of the mud—I mean the water. The most of the picture is a manifest impossibility—that is to say, a lie; and only rigid cultivation can enable a man to find the truth in a lis." But it en. abled Mr. Ruskin to do it, and it has enabled me to do it, and I am thankful for it. A Biston newspaper reporter went and took a look at the 'Slave Ship' floundering about in the fierce conflagration of reds and yellows, and said it reminded him of a tortoise-shall cat having a fit in a platter of tomatoes. In my then uneducated state, that went home to my non-cultivation. I thought here is a man with an unobstructed eye. Mr. Rus-kio would have said: This person is an ass. This is what I would say now.

However, our business in Baden Baden this time was to join our courier. I had thought it best to hire one, as we should be in Italy, by sud by, and we did not know that language. Neither did he. We found him at the hotel, ready to take charge of us. I saked him it he was 'all fixed. He said he was. That was very true. He had a trunk, two small satchels, and an umbrella. I was to pay him $55 a month and railway fares. On the continent the railway fare on a trunk is about the same as it is on a man. Couriers do not have to pay any board and lodging. This seems a great saving to the tourist that somebody pays that man's board and lodging. It occurs to him by and by, however, in one of his lucid moments.

of taken a CHAPTER XXV.

Next morning we left in the train for Switzerland, and reached Lucerne about ten o'clock at night. The first discovery I made was that the beauty of the lake had not been exgagerated. Within a day or two I made another discovery. This was that the lauded chamois is not a wild goat; that it is not a

Months after this was written, I happened into the National Galery in London, and soon became so faccinated with the Turner pletures that I could hardly get away from the place. I went there often, afterwards, meaning to see the rest of the gallery, but the Turner spell was too strong: It could not be shaken off, However, the Turners which attracted me most did not rem and me of the 'Slavo Ship.;'

no periloin hunting it. The chamois is a black or brown creature no bigger than a mustard seed; you do not have to go after it, it comessatter you; it arrives in vast herds and skips and scampers all over your body, inside your clothes; thus it is not horned animal; that it is not shy; that it does not avoid human society; and there is shy, but extremely sociable; it is not afraid of man, on the contrary, it will attack him; its bite is not langerous, but neither is it pleasant; its activity has not been overstated—if you try to put your finger on it, it will skip a thousand times its own length at one jump, and no eye is sharp enough to see where it lights. A great deal of roman-tic nonsense has been written about the Swiss chamois and perils of hunting it, whereas the truth is that even women and children hunt it fearlessly; the hunting is going on all the time, day and night, in bed and out of it: indeed everybody hunts it. It is poetic foolishness to hunt it with a gun; very few people do that; there is not out man in a million who can hit it with a gun. It is much easier to catch it than it is to shoot it, and only the experienced chamois hunter can do either. Another common plece of exaggeration is that about the "scarcity" of the chamois. It is the reverse of scarce. Droves of 100,000,000 chamois are not unusual in the Swiss hotels. Indeed they are so numerous as to be a great pest. The romancer always dress up the chamois hunter, in a fanciful and picturesque costume, whereas the best way to hunt this game is to do without any costume at all. The article of commerce called chamois-skin is another fraud; nobody could skin a chamois, it is too small. The creature is a humbug in every way, and everything that has been written about it is sentimental exaggeration. It was no pleasure to me to find the chamois out, for he had been one of my pet illusions; all my life it had been my dream to see him in his native wilds some day, and engage in the adventurous sport of chasing him from cliff to cliff. It is no pleasure to me to expose him, but still it must be done, for when an honest writer diacovers an imposition it is his simple duty to strip it bare and hurl it down from ite place of honour, no matter who suffers by it; any other course would render him unworthy of the public confidence.

Lucerne is a charming place. It begins at the water's edge, with a fringe of hotels, and scrambles up and spreads itself over two or three sharp hills in a crowded, disorderly, but picturesque way, offering to the eye a heaped up confusion of red roofs, quaint gables, dormer windows, toothpick steeples, with he tlad Wa worm-fa square here an handthe dist helps of the tim line of with la trees. ry like people long th and nu shade d watch the cle the sta peaks. people, and ev young boats, when of the where calm, > having Mos are in stocks to go witho gets, his ! and s touri not t it ho eartl and You nam ed a bric plac regi reco thr roit

> > Lav

art

is to

tic

busy

chamois is a with here and there a bit of ancient embattled wall bending itself over the ridges, bigger than a worm-fashion, and here and there an old e to go after rives in vast square tower of heavy masonry. And also here and there a town clock with only one all over your hus it is not shy; that it and there is hand-a hand which stretches straight across the dist and has no joint in it; such a clock helps out the picture, but you cannot tell the time of day by it. Between the curving t is not afraid attack him; line of hotels and the lake is a broad avenue with lamps and, a double, rank, of low shade neither is it trees. The lake front is walled with masonbeen overry like a pier, and has a railing, to keep finger on it, people, from walking overboard. All day long the vehicles dash along the avenue; own length p enough to and nurses, children and tourists sit in the shade of the trees, or lean on the railing and al of roman. about the hunting it, watch the school of fishes darting about in the clear water or gaze out over the lake at the stately border of snow-hooded mountain women and hunting is peaks. Little pleasure steamers, black with light, in bed people, are coming and going all the time; body hunts of it with a and everywhere one sees young girls and young men paddling about in fanciful rowthere is not boats, or skimming along by the help of sails when there is any wind. The front rooms hit it with a it than it is of the hotels have little railed balconies, ced chamois where one may take his private luncheon in ier common calm, cool comfort and look down upon this about the is the rebusy and pretty scene and enjoy it without having to do any of the work connected with wise liotels. o be a great ress up the

and piotu-

est way to ny costume

body could

he creature

everything

sentimen-

ure to me

d been one

had been

tive wilds

venturous

liff. It is vriter dia-

e duty to its place

vorthy of

t begina

over two orderly,

he eye a

teeples,

quaint

Most of the people, both male and female, are in walking costume, and carry alpenstocks. Evidently it is not considered safe to go about in Switzerland, even in town, without an alpenstock. If the tourist forgets, and comes down to breakfast without his alpenstock, he goes back and gets it, and stands it up in the corner. When his touring in Switzerland is finished, he does not throw that broomstick away, but lugs it home with him, to the far corners of the earth, although this costs him more trouble and bother than a baby or a courier could. You see, the alpenstock is his trophy; his name is burned upon it; and if he has climbed a hill, or jumped a brook, or traversed a brickyard with it, he has the names of those places burned upon it, too. Thus it is his regimental flag, so to speak, and bears the record of his achievements. It is worth three francs when he buys it, but a bonanza could not purchase it after his great deeds have been inscribed upon it. There are have been inscribed upon it. artisans all about Switzerland whose trade it is to burn these things upon the alpenstock of the tourist. And observe, a man is respected in Switzerland according to his alpenstock. I found I could get no attention there, while I carried an unbranded one. However, branding is not expensive, to I soon remedied that. The effect upon the next detachment of tourists was very marked. I felt regard for my trouble.

Half of the summer horde in Switzerland is made up of English people; the other half is made up of many nationalities, the Germans leading and the Americans coming next. The Americans were not as numerous as I had expected they would be.

The 7:30 table d'hote at the great Schweitserhof furnished a mighty array and variety of nationalities, but it offered a better opportunity to observe costumes than people. for the multitude sate at simmensely long tables, and therefore the faces were mainly seen in perspective; but the breakfasts were served at small round tables, and then if one had the fortune to get a table in the midst of the assemblage, he could have as many faces to study as he could desire, wi We used to try to guess out the nationalities, and generally succeeded tolerably well. a sometimes we tried to guess people's names ; but that was a failure; that is a thing which probably requires a good deal of practice. We presently dropped it and gave our efforts to less difficult particulars. .. One morning I

'There is an American party.'

'Yes-but name the State.'

I named one State, Harris named another. We agreed upon one thing, however—that the young girl with the party was very beautiful, and very tastefully dressed. But we disagreed as to her age. I said she was eighteen, Harris said she was twenty. The dispute between us waxed warm and I finally said, with a pretence of being in earnest—

Well, there is one way to settle the mat-

Harris said, sarcastically, 'Certainly, that is the thing to do.' All you need to do is to use the common formula over here: go and say, 'I'm an American!' Of course she will be glad to see you.'

she will be glad to see you.'

Then he hinted that perhaps there was no great danger of my venturing to speak to

I said, 'I was only talking—I didn't intend to approach her, but I see that you do not knew what an intrepid person I am. I am not afraid of any woman that walks. I will go and speak to this young girl.'

The thing I had in my mind was not difficult. I meant to address her in the most respectful way, to askiher to pardon me if her strong resemblance to a former acquaintance of mine was deceiving me; and when she should reply that the name I mentioned was not the name she bore, I meant to 1 pardon again, most respectfully, and retire. There would be no harm done. I walked to her table, bowed to the gentleman, then turned to her and was about to begin my little speech when she exclaimed—in the 'I knew I wasn't mistaken—I told John it was you ! John: said it probably wasn't, but I knew I was right. I said vou would recognize me presently and come over; and I'm glad you did, for I shouldn't have felt much flattered if you had gone out of this room without recognizing me. Sit down, ait down—how odd it is—you are the last person I was ever expecting to see again.

This was a stupefying surprise. It took my wits clear away, for an instant. However, she shook hands cordially all around, and I sat down. But truly this was the tightest place I ever was in: I seemed to raguely remember the girl's face, now, but, I had no idea where I had seen it before, or what name belonged with it. I immediately tried to get up a diversion about Swiss scenery, to keep her from launching into topics that might betray that I did not know her, but it was of no use, she went right along upon matters which interested

· O dear, what a night that was, when the sea washed the forward boats away—do you remember it !'

'O, don't I !' said I,-but I didn't. wished the sea had washed the rudder and the smoke-stack and the captain away, --- then I could have located this questioner. 'And don't you remember how frightened poor Mavy was, and how she cried?'

'Indeed I do !' said I. 'Dear me, how it all comes back!' I fervently wished it would come back, -but my memory was a blank. The wise way would have been to self to do that after the young girl had praised me so for recognizing her; so I went on, deeper and deeper into the mire, hoping for a chance clue but never getting one. The Unrecognizable continued, with vivacity, -

Do you know, George married Mary, after all?

Why, no! Did he?

'Indeed he did. He said he did not believe she was half as much to blame as her father was, and I thought he was right. Didn't you ?'

Of course he was. It was a perfectly plain case. I always said so.'

'Why no, you didn't !- at least that sum-

'Oh; no, not that summer. No, you are perfectly right about that. It was the following winter that I said it.'

'Well, as it turned out, Mary was not in the least to blame, -- it was all her father's fault,—at least his and old Darley's.'

It was necessary to say something -so I nam

neve I chile

thou to h

lar.

I w liev ask

WOI atril

that

said

chil

my

do

mit

you

we

day

no

thi to

m

88

to

W th

80

at

ti

b

I

and hath with cent with the steep seasons of classification of things sented as the steep seasons of the steep sea

So he was, but then they always had a great affection for him, although he had so many eccentricities. You remember that when the weather was the least cold, he would try to come into the house.

I was rather afraid to proceed. Evidently Darley was not a man,—he must be some other kind of animal,—possibly a dog, may-be an elephant. However, tails are common to all animals, so I ventured to say,

And what a tail he had l'and

One! He had a thousand ! 1 38 and a This was bewildering. I did not quite know what to say, so I only said,-

'Yes, he was rather well fixed in the matter of tails.

'For a negro, and a crazy one at that, I should say he was,' said she.

It was getting pretty sultry for me. I said to myself, 'Is it possible she is going to stop there, and wait for me to speak?' If she despite conversation is blocked. A negro with a thousand tails is a topic which a person cannot talk upon fluently and instructively without more or less preparation. As to diving rashly into such a vast subject, --

But here to my gratitude, she interrupted my thought by saying,— Yes, when it came to tales of his crazy woes, there was simply no end to them if anybody would listen. His own quarters were comfortable enough, but when the weather was cold, the family were sure to have his company—nothing could keep him out of the house. But they always bore it kindly because he had saved Tom's life, years before. You remember Tom?

O, perfectly. Fine fellow he was, too.'
Yes he was. And what a pretty little thing his child was.'

You may well say that. I never saw a prettier child.'

'I used to delight to pet it and dandle it and play with it.'
'So did L'

'You named it. What was that name?

I can't call it to mind.

It appeared to me that the ice was getting pretty thin, here. I would have given something to know what the child's sex was. However, I had the good luck to think of a name that would fit either sex - so I brought it out-

' I named it Frances.'

From a rocatve, I suppose? But you à or father's hing -so I

a trouble-

vays had a he had so mber that at cold, he

Evidently dog, mayo common not quite

d in the

at that, I

or me. I a going to peak? If cked. A pic which ly and ineparation.

terrupted

his crazy to them His own but when vere sure ald keep vays bore m's life, ras, too.' tty little

er saw a landle it

name !

getting n someink of a brought

dut you

'Why, what is that?'

named the one that died, too-one that I never saw. What did you call that one?

I was out of neutral names, but as the child was dead and she had never seen it, I thought I might risk a name for it and trust to luck. Therefore I said—

I called that one Thomas Henry.'

She said, musingly-

That is very singular--very singu.

I sat still and let the cold sweat run down. I was in a good deal of trouble, but I believed I could worry through if she wouldn't ask me to name any more children. I wonfiered where the lightning was going to strike next. She was still ruminating over that last child's title, but presently she

'I have always been sorry you were away at the time—I would have had you name my child.'

'Your shild ! Are you man d?' I have been married thirteen ears.

'Christened. you mean.'

' No, married. The youth by your side is my son.

It seems incredible—even impossible. I do not mean any harm by it, but would you mind telling me if you are any over eighteen ? -that is to say, will you tell me how old you are ? '

'I was just nineteen the day of the storm we were talking about. That was my birthday.' That did not help matters much, as I did not know the date of the storm. I tried to think of some non-committal thing to say, to keep up my end of the talk and render my poverty in the matter of reminiscences as little noticeable as possible, but I seemed to be about out of non-committal things. was about to say, 'You haven't changed a bit since then,'—but that was risky. I thought of saying 'You have improved ever so much since then,'—but that wouldn't answer, of course. I was about to try a shy at the weather, for a saving change, when the firl slipped in ahead of me and said-

' How I have enjoyed this talk over those happy aid times-haven't you ?'

'I never have spent such a half hour in all my life before I said I, with emotion; and I could have added, with a near approach to truth, and I would rather be scalped than spend another one like it. I was holily grateful to be through with the ordeal, and was about to make my good-byes and get out, when the girl said-

But there is one thing that is ever so puzzling to me.'

'That dead child's name. What did you

Here was another bains place to be in; I had forgotten the child's name; I hadn't imagined it would be needed again. However, I had to pretend to know, anyway, se

Joseph William.

The youth at my side corrected me, and

No-Thomas Henry.'

I thanked him—in words—and said, with

O yes—I was thinking of another child that I named—I have named a great many, and I get them confused—this one was named Henry Thompson-

'Thomas Henry,' calmly interposed the boy.

'I thanked him again—strictly in words,

'Thomas Henry—yes, Thomas Henry was the poor child's name. I named him for Thomas—er—Thomas Carlyle, the great author, you know—and Henry—er—er— Henry the Eighth. The parents were very grateful to have a child named Thomas Hen-

That makes it more singular than ever, murmured my beautiful friend.

'Does it?' Why?'
'Because when the parents speak of that child now, they always call it Susan Amelia.'

That spiked my gun. I could not say anything. I was entirely out of verbal obliquities; to go further would be to lie, and that I would not do; so I simply sat still and suffered—sat mutely and resignedly there, and sizzled—for I was being slowly fried to death in my own bluhes. Presently the enemy laughed a happy laugh and said:

'I have enjoyed this talk over old times, but you have not. I saw very soon that you were only pretending to know me, and as I had wasted a compliment on jou in the be-ginning, I made up my mind to punish you. And I have succeeded pretty well. I was glad to see that you knew George and Tom and Darley, for I had never heard of them before, and therefore couldinot be sure that you had; and I was glad to learn the names of those imaginary children, too. One can get quite a fund of information out of you if one goes at it cleverly. Mary and the storm, and the sweeping away of the forward boats, were facts—all the rest was fiction. Mary was my sister; her full name was Mary —. Now do you remember me? 'Yes,' I said, 'I do remember you now; and you are as hard hearted as you were thirteen years ago in that ship, else you wouldn't have punished me so. You haven't changed your mature nor your person in any way at all; you look just as young as you were then, and you have transmitted a deal of your comelieness to this fine boy. There—if that speech moves you any let's fly the flag of truce, with the understanding that I am conquered and confess it.

All of which was agreed to and accomplished on the agot. When I went back to Harris,

I said :

Now you see what a person with talent and address can do."

Excuse me, I see what a person of collossal ignorance and simplicity can do. The idea of your going and intruding on a party of strangers that way, and talking for half an hour; why, I never heard of a mau in his right mind doing such a thing before. What did you say to them?

'I never said any harm. I merely asked the girl what her name was. "I don't don't. Upon my word I don't. I think you were capable of it. It was stupid of me to let you go over there and make such an exhibition of yourself. But you know I couldn't really believe you would do such an inexcusable thing. What will people think of us? But how did you say it?—I mean the manner of it. I hope you were not about? abrupt.

'No, I was careful about that. "My friend and I would like to know what your name is, if you don't mind."

No, that was not abrupt. There is a polish about it that does you infinite credit.
And I am glad you put me in; that was a delicate attention which I appreciate at its full value. What did she do?

She didn't do anything in particular.

She told me her name,'

'Simply told you her name. Do you mean to say she did not show any surprise?

Well, now I come to think, she did show something; maybe it was surprise; I hadn't thought of that, -I took it for gratification.'

O, andoubtedly you were right; it must have been gratification; it could not be otherwise than gratifying to be assaulted by a stranger with such a question as that. Then what did you do?'

· I offered my hand and the party gave me a shake,

'I saw it ! I did not believe my own eyes, at the time. Did the gentleman say anything about cutting your throat?'
'No, they all seemed glad to see me, as far as I could judge.

And do you know, I believe thay were. I think they said to themseves, "Doubtless this curiosity has got away from his keeper -let us amuse ourselves with him.' There is no other way of accounting for their facile decility. You sat down. Did they ask you to sit down?

'No, they did not ask me, but I suppose they did not think of it.

'You have an unerring instinct. What else did you do? What did you talk ghout?' 'Well I saked the girl how old she was?'

'Undoubtedly. Your delicacy is beyond praise. Go on, go on—don't mind my ap-parent misery—I always look so when I am ateeped in a profound and reverent joy. Go on,—she told you her age? 'Yes, she told me her age, and all about her mother, and her grandmother, and her other relations, and all about herself.

Did she volunteer these statistics?

'Ne, not exactly that. I asked the questions and she answered them.'

This is divine. Go on—it is impossible that you forget to inquire into her politics?

No, I thought of that. She is a democrat, her husband is a republican, and both of them are Baptists.

'Her husband? Is that child married?' 'She is not a child. She is married, and that is her husband who is there with her.

Has she any children ?' Yes, -seven and a half.'

'That is impossible.'

No, she has them. She told me her-

'Well, but seven and a half? How do you make out the half? Where does the half come in?

That is a child which she had by another husband, -not this one but another one, so it is a step-child, and they do not count it full measure.

Another husband? Has she had another husband ?

'Yes, four. This one is number four.' I do not believe a word of it. It is impossible, upon its face. Is that boy there her brother ?

No, that is her son. He is her youngest. He is not as old as he looks; he is crly eleven and a half,"

· These things are all manifestly impossible. This is a wretched business. It is a plain case: they simply took your measure, and concluded to fill you up. They seem to have succeeded. I am glad I am not in the mess; they may at least be charitable enough to think there ain't a pair of us. Are they going to stay here long?

'No, they leave before noon.

There is cone man who is deeply gratful for that. How did you find out? You asked, I suppose !

No, along at first I inquired into their in their plane, in a general way, and they said they were going to be here a week, and make trips round about; but toward the end of the inter-1 they view when I said you and I would tour mppose around with them with pleasure, and offered to bring you over and introduce you, they heritated a little, and asked if you were from the same establishment that I was. I What bont? said you were, and then they said they had beyond changed their mind and considered it necesmy ap sary to start at once and visit a sick relative in Siberia. And sugal and the control for the control n I am

Ah me. you struck the summit! You struck the loftiest altitude of stupidity that human effort has ever reached. You shall have a monument of jackaus's skulls as high as the Strasburg spire if you die before I do. They wanted to know if I was from the same "establishment" that you hail from did they? What did they mean by " establishment?"

'I don't know; it never occurred to me

"Well, I know. They meant an asylum -an idiot sevirm, do you understand? So they do think there's a pair of us, after all,

Now what do you think of yourself?" " doing any harm. I did not mean to do any harm. They were very nice people, and they seemed to like me.

Harris made some rude remarks and left for his bedroom, - to break some furniture, he said. He was a singularly irascible man; any little thing would disturb his temper.

I had been well scorched by the young woman, but no matter, I took it out of Harris. One should always 'get even' in some way, else the sore place will go on hurting.

CHAPTER XXVI.

The Hofkirsche is celebrated for its organ concerts. All summer long the tourists flock to that church about aix e'clock in the evening, and pay their franc, and listen to the noise. They don't stay to hear all of it, but get up and tramp out over the sounding stone floor, meeting late comers who tramp in in a sounding and vigorous way. This tramping back and forth is kept up nearly all the time, and is accented by the continuous slamming of the door, and the coughing and barking and eneezing of the crowd. Meantime the big organ is booming and crashing and thundering away, doing its best to prove that it is the biggert and loudest organ in Europe, and that a tight little box of a church is the most favourable place to average and appreciate its powers merciful to passages: occasionally, but of the tramp-tramp of the tourists only allowed one to get fitful glimpses of them, so to speak. Then right away the organist would let go another valanche. 9 98 9

The commerce of Lucerne consists mainly in gimerackery: of the souvenir sort; the shops are packed with Alpine crystals, photographs of soenery, and wooden and ivory carvings I will not conceal the fact that miniature figures of the Lion of Lucerne are to be had in them. Millions of them. But they are libels upon him, every one of them. There is a subtle something about the majestic pathos of the original which the copyist cannot get. Even the sun fails to get it; both the photographer and the carver give you a dying lion, and that is all. The shape is right, the attitude is right, the proportions are right, but that indescribable something which makes the Lion of Lucerne the most mournful and moving piece of stone in the world, is wanting. A first read dead for The lion-lies in his lair in the perpendicular face of a low cliff-for he is carved from the living rock of the cliff. His size is coloseal, his attitude its noble. His head his howed, the broken spear is sticking in his shoulder, his protecting paw lies upon the lilies of France dVines hang down the cliff and wave in the wind, and a clear stream trickles from above and emptics into a pond at the base, and in the smooth surface of the pond the lion is mirrored, among the water lilies, knived

Around about are green trees and grass. The placer is a sheltered, reposeful, woodland nook, remote from noise and stir and confusion—and all this is fitting, for lions do die in such places, and not on granite pedestals in public squares fenced with fancy iron railings. .. The Lion of Lucerne would be impressive anywhere, but nowhere so impressive as where he is.

Martyrdom is the luckiest fate that can befall some peeple. Louis XVI. did not die in his bed, consequently history is very gentle with him; she is charitable toward his failings, and she finds in him high virtues which are not usually considered to be virthes when they are lodged in kings. She makes him out to be a neceson with a meek and modest spirit the wart of a female saint, and a wrong head. None of these qualities are kingly but the last. Taken together they make a character which would have fared harshly at the hands of history if its owner had had the ill luck to miss martyrdom. With the best intentions to do the right thing, he always managed to do the wrong one. Moreover, nothing could get the in. It is true, there were some soft and female saint out of him. He knew, well

y. Go about nd her

d the pesible ities ?" demo-

both ried ?' and ber.

her-

other ne,count

s im. here

other

gest. crly posis a

ure, n to the ble 114.

fal ou

eir

enough, that in national emergencies he must not consider how he ought to act, as a man, but how he ought to act as a king; so he honestly tried to sink the man and be the king-but it was a failure, he only succeeded in being the female saint. He was not itstant in season, but out of season. He could not be persuaded to do a thing while it could do any good—he was iron, he was adamant in his stubbornness then—but as soon as the thing had reached a point where it would be positively harmful to do it; do it he would, and nothing could stop him. d He did not do it because it would be harmful, but because he hoped it was not yet too late to achieve by it the good which it would have done I applied earlier. His comprehension was always a train or two behindhand. If a national too required amoutating, he could not see that it needed anything more than poulticing; when others saw that the mortification had reached the knes, he first perceived that: the toe needed outling off-so be out it off; and he cavered the lest at the knee when others saw that the disease had reached the thigh. He was good, and honest, and well mesning, in the matter of chasing national diseases, but he mover could overtake one. As a private man, he would have been lovable; but viewed as a king he was strictly contemptible.

His was a most unroyal career, but the pitiable spectacle in it, was his sentimental treachery to his Swiss guard on that messorable 10th of August, when he allowed these heroes to be massacred in his cause, and forbade them to shed the 'sacred French blood' purporting to be flowing in the veius of the red-capped mob of misoreants that was raging around the palace. He meant to be kingly, but he was only the female saint once more. Some of his biographers think that upon this occasion the spirit of Saint Louis had descended upon him. It must have found pretty cramped quarters. If Napoleon the First had stood in the shoes of Louis XVI that day, instead of being mesely a casual and unknown lookeron, there would be no Lion of Incorne, now; but there would be a well stocked Communist graveyard in Paris which would answer just as well to remember the 10th of August

Martyrdom made a saint of Marie coen of Scots three hundred years ago, and chapmas hardly lost all of her saintship yet. har yr-dom made a saint of the trivial and foolish Marie Antoinette, and her biographers still keep her fragment with the odour of sanctity to this day; while unconsciously proving upon almost every page they write that the only calamitous instinct which her husband lacked, she supplied—the instinct to root out and get rid of an honest, able, and loyal official, wherever she found him. The hidsons but beneficent French Revolution would have been deferred, or would have fallen short of completeness, or even might not have happened at all, if Marie As coincite had made the unwise mistake of not being born. The world owen a great deal to the French Revolution, and consequently to ite two chief promoters, Louis the Poor in Spirit and his queen,

We did not buy any wooden images of the Lion, nor any ivory or chony or marble or chalk or sugar or chocolate ones, or even any photographic slanders of him. The truth is, these copies were so common, so university in the shops and everywhere, that they prosently became as intolerable [to the wearied oye as the latest popular melody usually becomes to the harassed ear. In Lucerne, too, the wood carvings of other sorts, which had been so pleasant to look upon when one saw them occasionally at home, soon began to fatigue us. We grew very tired of seeing wooden quails and chickens picking and strutting around clock-faces, and still more tired of seeing wooden images of the alleged chamois skipping about wooden rocks, or lying upon them in family groups, or peering alertly up from behind them. The first day, I would have bought a hundred and fifty of these clocks if I had had the money—and I aid buy three-but on the third day the disease had run its course, I had convalenced and was in the market once more—trying to sell. However, I had no luck; which was just as well, for the things will be pretty enough, no doubt, when I get them home.

For years my pet aversion had been the cuckoo clock; now here I was, at last, right in the creature's home; so whereever I went, that distressing 'hoo'hoo! hoo' hoo ! hoo hoo ! was always in my ears. a nervous man, this was a fine state of things. Some sounds are hatefuller than others, but no sound is quite so inane, and silly, and aggravating as the 'hoo'hoo' of a silly, and aggravating as the 'hoo'hoo' of a cuckoo clock, I think. I bought one, and am carrying it home to a certain person; for I have always said that if . opportunity ever happened, I would do the man an ill turn. What I meant was man I would break one of his legs or a sothing of that sort; but in Lucerne; said sotly saw that I sould impair his mind. West would be more lasting, and more satisful tory every way. So I bought the cuckes clocks and if I ever get home with it, he is 'my to at,' as they say in the mines. I thought of another candidate—a book review schom I could injure W bridge Reu barn SWAY thing two ( old who T winik OJERI Well One fish

min

had

Thu

name

over,

pev the Per nig WA dir

lo

70

name if I wanted to-but after thinking it over, I didn't buy him a clock. I couldn't injure his mind.

handaut to 'root

d loyal

rolation d have might coinctte

bein; to the tolita

n Spirit of the

rble or ren any

with is,

Ly may

ey p. .. earied

lly be-

ne, too, ch had

e' saw

to day

seeing

g and more

or ly-

peering

et day,

fifty of

-and I

lesced

ing to Was t

pretty me. been

as, at

here-

hoo'

For te of

than and

of a

and

for nitv

n ill

plac

that t I

ore

ay.

ver

ey her

uld

The

We visited the two long, covered wooden bridges which span the green and brilliant Reuse just below where it goes plunging and hurrshing out of the lake. These rambling, swaybacked tunnels are very attractive swaybacked tunnels are very attractive things, with their alcoved outlooks upon the lovely and inspiriting water. They contain two or three hundred queer old pictures, by old Swiss masters—old boss sign painters, who flourished before the decadence of art.

The lake is alive with fishes, plainly visible to the eye, for the water is very clear. The parapets in front of the hotels were usually fringed with fishers of all ages. One day I thought, I would stop and see a fish caught. The result brought back to my mind, very forcibly, a circumstance which I had not thought of before for twelve years.

This one:

THE MAN WHO PUT UP AT GADSBY'S.

When my odd friend Riley and I were newspaper correspondents in Washington, in the winter of '67, we were coming down Pennsylvania Avenue one night, near midnight, in a driving storm of snow, when the flash of a street lamp fell upon a man who was eagerly tearing along in the opposite direction. This man instantly stopped, and

'This is lucky! You are Mr. Riley, ain't

Riley was the most self-possessed and solemnly deliberate person in the republic. He stopped, looked his man over from head to foot, and finally said—

'I am Mr. Riley. Did you happen to be looking for me ?

'That's just what I was doing,' said the man, joyously, 'and it's the biggest luck in the world that I've found you. My name is Lykins. I'm one of the teachers of the high school—San Francisco, As soon as I heard the San Francisco post-mastership was vacant, made up my mind to get it-and here I am.

arked, Mr. Lykins here marked,- you are. And have you got it?'

Well, not exactly got it, but the next thing to it. I've brought a petition, signed by the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and all the teachers, and by more than two hundred other people, Now I want you, if you'll be so good, to go around with me to the Pscific delegation, for I want to rush this through and get along home.

" if the reacter is so pressing, you will prefer that we visit the delegation to-night,' said Riley, in a voice which had nothing mocking in it—to an unaccustomed ear.

mocking in it—to an unaccustomed ear.

O, to-night, by all means! I haven't got any time to fool around. I want their promise before I go to bed—I ain't the talking kind, I'm the doing kind!

Yes—you're come to the right place for that. When did you arrive?

Just an hour ago.

When are you intending to leave?

When are you intending to leave? 'For New York to morrow evening—for

San Francisco next morning.

'Just so What are you going to do to-morrow?'

Do! Why I've got to go to the President with the petition and the delegation, and get the appointment, haven't I?

Yes very true that rect. And then what?

--- that is cor-

Executive session of the Senate at 2 p. m., -got to get the appointment confirmed I reckon you'll grant that ?

'Yes,....yes,' said Riley, medita-tively, 'you are right again. Then you take the train for New York in the evening, and the steamer for San Francisco next morning?' That's it—that's the way I map it out?'

Riley considered a while, and then said-You couldn't stay ..... a day .... well, say two days longer?'
Bless your soul, no! It's not my style.

I sin't a man to go fooling around—I'm a man that does things, I tell you.'

The storm was raging, the thick snow blowing in gusts. Riley stood silent, ap-parently deep in a reverse, during a minute or more, then he looked up and said—

'Have you ever heard about that man who put up at Gadaby's, once?.....But I see you haven t.'

He backed Mr. Lykins against au iron fence, buttonholed him, fastened him with his eye, like the ancient mariner, and pro-ceeded to unfold his narrative as placidly and peacefully as if we were all stretched comfortably in a blossomy summer meadow instead of being persecuted by a wintry midnight tempest: I will tell you about that man. in Jackson's time. Gadsby's was, the principal hotel, then. Well, this man arrived from Tennessee about nine o'clock, one morning, with a black coachman and a splendid four horse carriage and an elegant dog, which he was evidently fond and proud of ; he drove up before Gadsby's and the clerk and the landlord and everybody rushed out to take charge of him, but he said, 'Never mind' and jumped out and told the coachman to wait—said he hadn't time to take anything to eat, he only had a little claim against the government to oclict, would run across the way, to the Treasury and fetch the money, and then get right along back to Tennessee, for he was in considerable of a hurry.

Well, about eleven o'clock that night he came back and ordered a bed and told them to put the horses up—said he would collect the claim in the morning. This was in January, you understand-January 1834-the 3d of January—Wednesday.

'Well, or the 5th of vebruary, he sold the fine carriage, and bought a cheap second-hand one—said it would answer just as well to take the money home in, and he didn't care for style.

On the 11th of August he sold a pair of the fine horses,—said he'd often thought a pair was better than four; to go over the rough mountain roads with, where a body had to be careful about his driving,—and there wasn't so much of his claim but he could ug the money home with a pair easy enough.

On the 13th of December he sold another horse, -said two warn't necessary to drag that old light vehicle with in fact one could snatch it along faster than was absolutely necessary, now that it was good solid winter weather and the roads in aplended condition.

On the seventeeth of February, 1835, he sold the old carriage and bought a cheap second-hand buggy,—said a buggy was just the trick to skim along mushy, shaby early spring roads with, and he had always wanted to try a buggy on those mountain roads, anyway.

'On the 1st of August he sold the buggy and bought the remains of an old sulky, said he just wanted to see those green Tennassesns stare and gawk when they saw him come a-ripping along in a sulky,—didn't believe they'd ever hear of a sulky in their lives,

Well, on the 29th of August he sold his coloured coachman, -said he didn't need a coachman for a sulky,—wouldn't be room enough in it for two anyway,—and besides it wasn't every day that Providence sent a man a fool who was willing to pay nine hundred dollars for such a third-rate negro as that,—been wanting to get rid of the creature for years, but didn't like to throw him away.

Eighteen months later,—that it to say, en the 15th of February, 1837,—he sold the sulky and bought a saddle,—said horseback riding was what the doctor had always recommended , him to take, and dog'd if he wanted to risk his | neck going over those mountain roads on whoels in the dead of winter, not if he knew himself.

On the 9th of April he sold the saddle, said he wasn't going to rick his life with any perishable saddle girth that ever was made, over a rainy, miry April road, while he could ride bareback and know and feel he was safe,—always had despised to ride on a saddle, anyway

On the 24th of April he seld his herse, said 'I'm just 57 to day, hale and hearty,— it would be a presty howdy-do for me to be wasting such a trip as that and such weather as this, on a horse, when there ain't anything in the world so splendid as a tramp on foot through the fresh spring woods and over the cheery mountains, to a man that is a man,—and I can make my dog carry my claim in a little bundle any-way, when its collected. So to morrow I'll be up bright and early, make my little old collection, and mosey off to Tennessee, on my own bind legs, with a rousing Good-bye, to Gadaby's.

On the 22nd of June he sold his dog,said 'Dern a dog, anyway, where you're just starting off on a rattling bully pleasure. tramp through the summer woods and hills. perfect nuisance,—chases the squirrels, barks at everything, goes a capering and splattering around in the fords, man can't get any chance to reflect and enjoy nature, —and I'd a blamed sight rather carry the claim myself, it's a mighty sight safer: a dog's mighty uncertain in a financial way, always noticed it,—well, good-bye, boys,— last call,—I'm off for Tennessee with a good leg and a gay heart, early in the morning!'
There was a pause and a ellence,—except the noise of the wind and the pelting snow.

Mr. Lykins said, impatiently,— Well?

Riley said,

Well,—that was thirty years ago.

Very well, very well, —what of it? 'I'm great friends with that old patriarch. He comes every evening to tell me good bye. I saw him an hour ago,—he's off for Tennessee early to morrow morning,—as usual; said he calculated to get his claim through and be off before night-owls like me have turned out of bed. The tears were in his eyes, he was so glad he was going to see his old Ten-nessee and his friends once more.

Another silent pause. The stranger broke

'Is that all ?' That is all.'

Well, for the time of night, sad the kind of night, it seems to me the story was full long enough. But what's it all for?

O, nothing in particular.'

· We 10, Only, hurry with Lykin by's' bye. So heel standi SHOW I street He To conclu that t

8008 8 and e to p that I the p joy it as thi tient dition there tisb fe lated

> Clo all" vinc Four ware upor age. mati cial littl man The CASE glac Blow peri bad aro len The are cha olil the vig ha e dead of the addle, is life with to ever was road, while ow and feel d to ride on his herre,— d hearty,— or me to be

and such
when there pleudid as a
resh spring strains, to a make myundle anymerrow I'll y little old nnessee, on Good-bye,

his dog,— here you're
ly pleasuree and hille.
s equirrele,
pering and
-man can't joan carry the
it safer; a cial way,— you'th a good morning!

e,—except lting snow.

go.' fit?' patriarch. good bye. or Tennes-isual; said rough and we turned a eyes, he old Ten-

the kind

iger broke

Well, where's the point of it?"

Only, if you are not in too much of a hurry to rush off to San Francisco with that post-office appointment, Mr. Lykins, I'd advise you to put up at Gadsby's for a spell, and take it easy. Goodbess you to by's for a spell, and take it easy. Goodbye. God bless y u ! So saying, Riley blandly turned on his heel and left the astonished school teacherstanding there, a musing and potential snow image shining in the broad glow of the atreet lamp.

He never got that post-office.

To go back to Lucerne and its fishers, I concluded, after about nine hours' waiting, that the man who proposes to tarry till he sees some body hook one of those well-fed and experienced fishers will find it wisdom to 'put up at Gadaby's' and take it easy. It is likely that a fish has not been caught on that lake pier for forty years; but no matter, the patient fisher watches his cork there all the day long, just the same, and seems to enjoy it. One may see the fisher-loafers just as thick and contented and happy and patient all along the Seine at Paris, but tradition says that the only thing ever caught there in modern times is a thing they don't fish for at all—the recent dog and the translated cat.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Close by the Lion of Lucerne is what they call the 'Glacier Garden'—and it is the only one in the world. It is on high ground. Four or five years ago, some workmen who were digging foundations for a house came upon this interesting relic of a long departed age. Scientific men perceived in it a confirmation of their theories concerning the glacial period; so through their persuasions the little tract of ground was bought and permanently protected against being built upon. The soil was removed, and there lay the asped and gutter track which the ancient glacier had made as it moved along upon its slow and tedious journey. This track was perforated by huge pot shaped notes in the bed-rock, formed by the furious washingaround in them of boulders by the turbu-lent torrent which flows beneath all glaciers. These huge a and boulders still remain in the holer, they and the walls of the holes are worn mosta by the long continued chacing which they gave each other in those old days. It took a mighty force to charn these big lumps of stone around in that vigorous way. The neighbouring country had a very different shape, at that time the valleys have risen up and become hills, aince, and the hills have become valleys. The boulders discovered in the pote had travelled a great distance, for there is no rock like them nearer than the distant Rhone Glacier, when the distant is the distant of the control of t

For some days we were content to unjoy looking at the blue lake Lucerne and at the piled-up mames of snow mountains that border it all around—an entioing spectacle, this last, for there is a strange and fascinating beauty and charm about a majestic anowpeak with the sun blazing upon it or the moon-light softly enriching it—but finally we concluded to try a bit of excursioning around on a steamboat, and a dash on foot at the Rigi. Very well, we had a delightful trip to Fluelen, on a breezy, sunny day. Everybody sat on the upper deck, on benches, under an awning; everybody talked, laughed, and exclaimed at the wonderful scenery; in truth, a trip on that lake is almost the perfection of pleasuring. The mountains were a never ceasing marvel. Sometimes they rose straight up out of the lake, and towered aloft and overshadowed our plgmy steamer with their prodigious bulk in the most impressive way. Not snow-clad mountains, yet they climbed high enough toward the sky to meet the clouds and well their foreheads in them. They were not barren and repulsive, but clothed in green, and restful and pleasant to the eye. And they were so almost straight up-and-down, sometimes, that one could not imagine a man being able to keep his footing upon such a surface, yet there are pasns, and the Swiss people go up and down them every

Sometimes one of these monster precipices had the slight inclination of the huge shiphouses in dook yards—then high aloft, toward the sky, it took a little stronger inclination, like that of a mansard roof—and perched on this dizzy mansard one's eye detected little things like martin boxes, and presently perceived that these were the dwellings of peasants—re sizy place for a home truly. And supplies of peasant should walk in his sleep, or his child fall out of the front yard?—the friends would have a tedious long journey down out of those cloud heights before they found the remains. And yet those far-away homes looked ever so seductive, they were so remote from the troubled world, they dezed in such an atmosphere of peace and dreams—surely no one who had learned to live up there would never want to live on a meaner level.

We swept through the prettiest little curving arms of the lake, among these colors al green walls, enjoying new delights, always, as the stately panorama unfolded itself before us and re-rolled and hid itself behind as ; and now and then we had the thrilling m rprice of bursting suddenly, upon a tre-mendous white mass like, the distant and dominating Jungfrau, or some kindred givet. coming head and shoulders above the his at led waste of lesser Alps. 11.

Once, while I was hungrily taking in one of these surprises, and doing my best to get all I possibly could of it while it should la I was interrupted by a young and care-free

You're an American, I think-so'm I. He was about eighteen, or possibly nine-teen; slender and of medium height; open, frank, happy face; a rostless but inde-pendent eye; a snub nose, which had the air of drawing back with a decent reserve from the silky new born moustache, below it until it should be introduced; a loosely hung jaw, calculated to work easily in the sockets. He were a low-growned, narrow-brimmed straw hat, with a broad blue rib-ben around it which had a white anohor embroidered on it in front; nobby shorttailed coat, pantaloons, west, all trim and next and up with the fashion; red-striped stockings, very low quarter patent leather shoes, tied with black ribbon; blue ribbon around his neck, wide-open collar; tiny diamond stude; wrinkleless kids; projecting cuffs, fastened with large oxydized silver sleeve-buttons, hearing the device of a dog's face—English pug. He carried a slim cane, surmounted with an English pug's head with red glass eyes. Under his arm he carried a German grammar—Otto's. His hair was short, straight and smooth, and presently when he turned his head a moment, I saw that it was nicely parted behind. He took a cigarette out of a dainty box, stuck it into a meerschaum holder which he carried in a morocco case, and reached for my cigar. While he was lighting, I said-

' Yes-I am an American. 'I knew it-I can always tell them. What ship did you come over in?'

Holsatis.

'We came in the Batavia—Cunard, you know. What kind of a passage did you have?'

'Tolerably rough.'

'So did we. Captain said he'd hardly ever seeu a rougher. Where are you from ?' New England.

'So'm I. I'm from New Bloomfield. Anybody with you?

'Yes-a friend.' Our whole family's along. It's awful slow, going around alone—don't you think To let , the the Rather slow.

Ever been over here before ?'

I haven't. My first trip. But we've been all around—Paris and everywhere. I'm to enter Harvard next year. Studying Gerno an all the time, now. Can't enter till I know German. I know considerable French. I get along pretty well in Paris, or anywhere, where they speak French. What hotel are you stopping at ?

No lis that so ? I never see you in the reception room. I go to the reception room a good deal of the time, because there's so many Americans there. I make lots of acquaintances. I know an American as soon as I see him—and so I speak to him and make his acquaintance. I like to be always making acquaintances—don't you?'
Lord, yes!'
You see it breaks up a trip like this, first rate. I never get bored on a trip like this, if I can make acquaintances and have somebody to talk to. But I think a trip like this would be an awful bore, if a body couldn't find anybody to get acquainted with and talk to on a trip like this. I'm fond of talking, sin't you?

' Passionately.'

'Have you felt bored, on this trip?'
'Not all the time, part of it.'

'That's it!—you see you ought to go around and get acquainted, and talk. That's my way. That's the way I always do—I just go 'round, 'round, and talk, talk, talk-I never get bored. You been up the Rigi yet?

'Going ?' I think so.

, 6 What hotel you going to stop at?

'I don't know. Is there more than one?' 'Three. You stop at the Schreiber—you'll find it full of Americans. What ship did you say you came over in?' ' City of Antwerp.

German, I guess. You going to Geneva?' Yes.

What hotel you going to stop at?'
Hotel de l' Ecu de Geneve.'

Don't you do it! No Americans there! You stop at one of those big hotels over the bridge—they're packed full of Americans.'

But I want to practise my Arabic. 'Good gracious, do you speak Arabio?' Yes-we'll enough to get along.

'Why, hang it, you won't get along in Goneva—they don't speak Arabic, they speak French. What hotel are you stopping at here ? '

'Hotel Pension-Beaurivage.'

'Sho, you ought to stop at the Schweitserhof. I was the be your Baed Yes, I WATD'S AU

No A it's just a reception lots of acq I did at fi stop in t through. 'Arkan

'Is the New Bloc home. I' day, ain't Divine

That's ing around quaintano can, soon him and ever bored new acqu right kind 'I prefe

'That's prople lik , and ya vping a things, buthey like but as fo been up th

Yes. What 'Schrei 'That's Full of A

-always body says over in?' Ville 'French sage did. some Am And av too, -I ha poon him but as I left me ; him, he w natured n

Half an bench in noble mor -a mono Nature's dal rock Nature t

But we've bere. I'm dying Ger tor till I de French. or any.

rou in the there's so lots of acan as soon him and to be al-

1 1

e this, first like this, have someip like this dy couldn't th and talk of talking, ght to go lk. That's vays do—I and talk, ou been up cip ?'.

at? than one? ber-you'll t ship did

Geneva? at?

ans there ! ls over the ericans. bic. Arabio?'

t along in they speak opping at Schweit.

zorhof. Didn't you know the Schweitzerhof was the best hotel in Switzerland? / Look at your Baedecker.

Yes, I know-but I had an idea there warn't any Americans there.'

'No Americans! Why bless your soul!
it's just slive with them! I'm in the great reception room most all the time. I make lots of acquaintances there. Not as many as I did at first, because now only the new ones stop in there—the others go right along through. Where are you from?

Arkansaw. Is that so? I'm from New England— New Bloomfield's my town when I'm at home. I'm having a mighty good time today, ain't you?'

'That's what I call it. I like this knocking around, loose and easy, and making acquaintances and talking. I know an American, soon as I see him; so I go and speak to him and make his acquaintance. I ain't ever bored, on a trip like this, if I can make new acquaintances and talk. I'm awful fond of talking when I can get hold of the right kind of a person, ain't you?'

I prefer it to any other dissipation.'
That's my netion, too. Now some prople like to take a book and sit down and read, and read, and read, or moon around ya ping at the lake or these mountains and things, but that ain't my way; no, sir, if they like it, let 'em do it, I don't object; but as for me, talking's what I like. You been up the Rigi?'

'What hotel did you stop at?'

Schreiber.

'That's the place !—I stopped there too.
Full of Americans, wasn't it? It always is —always is. That's what they say. Everybody says that. What ship did you come over in?

'Ville de Paris.'

'French, I reckon. What kind of a passage did...... excuse me a minute, there's some Americans I haven't seen before.'

And away he went. He went uninjured, too,—I had the murderous impulse to harpoon him in the back with my alpenstock, but as I raised the weapon the disposition left me; I found I hadn't the heart to kill him, he was such a joyous, innocent, goodnatured numskull.

Half an hour later I was sitting on a bench inspecting with atrong interest, a noble monolith which we were skimming by, -a monolith not shaped by man, but by Nature's free great hand,—a massy pyramidal rock eighty feet high, devised by So'm I. No— I didn't mean that; Nature ten million years ago against the I'm from New England. New Bloomfield's day when a man worthy of its adoute need it for his monument. The time came at last, and now this grand remembrancer bears Schiller's name in huge letters upon its face. Curiously enough, this rock was not degraded or defiled in any way. It is said that two years ago a stranger let himself down from the top of it with ropes and pulleys, and painted all over it, in blue letters bigger than those in Schiller's name, these words:

TRY SOZODONT; BUY SUN STOVE POLISH ; HELMBOLD'S BUCHU; TRY BENZALINE FOR THE BLOOD.

He was captured, and it turned out that he was an American. Upon his trial the judge said to him,

'You are from a land where any insolent that wants to, is privileged to profane and insult Nature, and through her, Nature's God, if by so doing he can put a sordid penny in his pocket. But here the case is different. Because you are a foreigner and ignorant, I will make your sentence light; if you were a native I would deal atrenuously with you.—Hear and obey: You will immediately remove every trace of your offensive work from the Schiller monument; you pay a fine of ten thousand francs; you will suffer two years imprisonment at hard labour; you will then be horse whipped, tarred and feathered, deprived of your ears, ridden on a rail to the confines of the canton, and banished forever. The severer penalties are remitted in your case,—not as a grace to you, but to that great republic which had the misfortune to give you birth.

The steamer's benches were ranged back across the deck. My back hair was ming-ling innocently with the back hair of a couple of ladies. Presently they were ad-dressed by some one and I overheard this conversation :

'You are Americans, I think? So'm I.'

'Yes,—we are Americans.'
'I knew it—I can always tell them.
What ship did you come over in?'
'City of Chester.'

Oyes,—Inman line. We came in the Batavia,—Cunard, you know. What kind a passage did you have?'

' Pretty fair.'

We had it awful ! That was luck. rough. Captain said he'd hardly ever seen it rougher. Where are you from ?."

'New Jersey"

These your children ?-belong

my place. These your children ?—belong to both of you?

Only to one of us; they are mine; my friend is not married.

'Single, I reckon? So'm I. [Are gyou two ladies travelling alone?

'No—my husband is with us.

'Our whole family is along. It's awful slow, going around alone—don't you think so?

'I suppose it must be.'
'Hi, there's Mount Pilatust coming in sight again. Named after Pontius Pilate. you know, that shot the apole off William Tell's head. Guide-book tells all about it, they say. I didn't read it—an American told me. I don't read when I'm knocking around like this, having a good time. Did you ever see the chapel where William Tell 'I did not know he ever preached there?' used to preach ?'

O, yes he did. That American told me He don't ever shut up his guide book. He knows more Boot this lake than the tishes in it. Besides, they call it 'Tell's Chapel'—you know that yourself. You ever been over here before?"

· Yes. 'I'haven't. It's my first trip. But we've been all around -Paris and everywhere. I'm to enter Harvard next year. - Studying German all the time now. Can't enter till I know German, This book's Otto's grammar. It's a mighty good book to get the ich habe gehabt haben's out of. But I don't really atudy when I'm knocking around this way. If the notion takes me, I just run over my little old ich habe gehabt, du hast gehabt, er hat gehabt, wir haben, gehabt, the habet hat gehabt, wir haben gehabt, ihr habet gehabt, sie haben gehabt-kind of 'Now-Ilay me-down to-sleep' fashion, you know, and after that, may-be I don't buckle to it again for three days. It's awful undermining to the intellect, German is , you want to take it in small doses, or first you know your brains all run together, and you feel th m sloshing around in your head same as so much drawn butter. But French is different; French sin't anything. I sin't any more afraid of French than a tramp's afraid of pie; I can rattle off my little j'ai, to as, il a, and the rest of it, just as easy as a b-c. I get along pretty well in Paris, or anywhere they speak French. What hotel you stopping at?"

'The Schweitzerhof.

'No! is that so? I never see you in the big reception room. I go in there a good deal of the time, because there's so many Americans there. I make lots of acquaintances. You been up the Rigi yet?'

No.

Going. W. Sine 'We tuink of it.'

What hotel you going to stop at?

'I don't know.'

'Well, then, you stop at the Schreiber-its full of Americans. What ship did you come over in ?'

'City of Chester.'

O, yes, I remember I asked you that before. But I always ask everybody what ship they came over in, and so sometimes I forget and ask them again. You going to Geneva! 'Yea.'

'What hotel are you going to stop at?' "We expect to stop in a pension.

'I don't hardly believe you'll like that there's very few Americans in the pensions What hotel are you stopping at here!

'The Schweitzerhof.'

"O, yes, I asked you that before, too. Bu I always ask everybody what hotel they'n stopping at, and so I've got my nead mixed up with hotels. But it makes talk and I love to talk. It refreshes me up sodon't it you—on a trip like this? Yes-sometimes.

Well, it does me, too. As long as I'm talking I never feel bored-ain't that the wa with you? 'Yes—generally. tions to the rule.' But there are exce

'O, of course. I don't care to ta to everybody myself. If a perm starts to jabber-jabber abor scenery, and history, and picture and all sorts of tiresome things, I as the fan-tods mighty soon. I say "Well, must be going now—hope I'll see you again—and then I take a walk. Where you from?

'New Jarney,'

'Why, bother it all, I asked you that b fore, too. Have you seen the Lion of L cerne ?

'Not yet.'

Nor I, either. But the man who told about Mount Pilatus says it's one of the things to see. It's twenty-eight feet lon It don't seem reasonable, but he said so, an way. He saw it yesterday : said it w dying then, so I reckon it is dead by the time; but that ain't any matter, of court they'll stuff it. Did you say the children are yours—or hers?

O, so you did. Are you going up to no, I asked you that. What she ..... no, I asked you that, too. Whath tel are you.....no, you told me that. me see .... um ..... O, what kind of voy..... no, we've been over that groun

Um that is all. have made Tag.

The Rigi-6.000 feet commands a green valley pact and me miles in oir by rail, or h prefer. I a in walking started dow got sshore s quarters of This village We were

leafy mule p

flow as usual a breezy, clou ual, and the boughs, of bli beetling cliff of dreamland fect—and the soon be enjo wonderful sp object of our ly) no real ne made the wa I say 'app book had a the distance eau-and f be getting r only certain ed to find ou it is from th mit is 6,000 4,500 feet walked half swing and h cleared for boy whom and satchel us; that le I suppose to stretch o take a bit o

to, for pres

ides to hire

We told hi

in a hurry.

particular

the top wh

to clear of the upper

too. Um.....um..... well, I believe that is all. Boujour—I am very glad to have made your acquaintance, ladies. Guten Tag.'

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The Rigi-Kulm islan imposing Alpine mass, 6,000 feet high, which stands by itself, and commands a mighty presence of blue lakes, green valleys and snowy mountains—a compact and magnificent picture three hundred miles in circumference. The ascent is made by rail, or horseback, or on foot, as one may prefer. I and my agent panoplied curselves in walking costume one bright morning, and started down the lake on the steamboat; we got ashore at the village of Waggis, three quarters of an hour distant from Lucerne. This village is at the foot of the mountain.

We were soon tramping leisurely up the leafy mule-path, and then the talk began to flow as usual. It was twelve o'clock noon, as a breezy, cloudless day; the ascent was gradual, and the glimpses, from under curtaining boughs, of blue water, and tiny sail boats, and beetling cliffs, were as charming as glimpses of dreamland. All the circumstances were perfect—and the anticipations, too, for we should soon be enjoying, for the first time, that wonderful spectacle, an Alpine sunrise—the object of our journey. There was (apparently) no real need to hurry, for the guide-book made the walking distance from Waggis to the summit only three hours and a quarter. I say 'apparently,' because the guide-book had already fooled us once—about the distance from Allerheiligen to Oppensau—and for aught I knew it might be getting ready to fool us again. We were often out for ourselves how many hours it is from the bottom to the top. The summit is 6,000 feet above the lake. When we had walked half an hour, we were fairly into the swing and humour of the undertaking, so we cleared for action; that is to say, we got a boy whom we met to carry our alpenstocks and satchels and overcoats and things for us; that left us free for business.

I suppose we must have stopped oftener to attetch out on the grass in the chade and take a bit of a smoke than this boy was used to, for presently he asked if it had been our idea to hire him by the job, or by the year? We told him he could move along if he was in a hurry. He said he wasn't in such a very particular hurry, but he wanted to get to the top while he was young. We told him to clear out, then, and leave the things at the uppermost hotel and say we should b along presently. He said he would secure us a hotel if he could, but if they were all full he would ask them to build another one and hurry up and get the paint and plaster dry against we arrived. Still gently chaffing us he pushed ahead, up the trail, and con disappeared. By six o'clock we were pretty high up in the air, and the view of lake and mountains had greatly grown in breadth and interest. We halted a while at a little public house, where we had bread and cheese and a quart or two of fresh milk, out on the porch, with the big panorama all before us,—and then moved on again.

Ten minutes afterward we met a hot, red-

Ten minutes afterward we met a hot, redfaced man plunging down the mountain, with mighty strides, swinging his alpenstock ahead of him and taking a grip on the ground with its iron point to support these big strides. He stopped, fanned himself with his hat, swabbed the perspiration from his face and neck with a red handk rehief, panted a moment or two, and asked how far it was to Waggis. I said three hours. He looked surprised, and said,—

'Why, it seems as if I could tose a biscurt into the lake from here, it's so close by. Is that an inn, there?'

I said it was.

'Well,' said he, 'I can't stand another three hours, I've had enough for to-day;
I'll take a bed there.'

I asked.—
'Are we nearly to the top!'
'Nearly to the top! Why, bless your soul, you haven't really started, yet.'

1 said we would put up at the inn, too.
So we turned back and ordered a hot supper, and had quite a jolly evening of it with the Englishman.

t ? reiber—its I you come ou that be what ship nes I forget to Geneva?

like that he pension here?

hotel they'n my head makes talk me up sot that the wa

oare to take f a personal picture things, I personal picture things, I personal things, I d you that b

an who told me t'a one of the ight feet long he said so, and it was is dead by the atter, of course of the children.

t going up to the what his too. What his large what kind of the country that ground four hours in a country like this to last him a year. Harris believed our boy had been loading him up with misinformation; and this was probably the case, for his epithet described that boy to a dot.

We got under way about the turn of noon and pulled out for the summit again, with a fresh and vigorous step. When we had gone about two hundred yards, and stopped to rest, I glanced to the left while I was lighting my pipe, and in the distance de-tected a long worm of black smoke orawling lazily up the steep mountain. Of course that was the locomotive. We propped ourselves on our cloows at once, to gaze, for we had never seen a mountain railway yet. Presently we could make out the train. It seemed incredible that that thing could creep straight up a sharp slant like the roof of a house -- but there it was, and it was doing that very miracle.

In the course of a comple of hours we reached a fine breezy al'itude where the little shepherd-huts had big stones all over their roofs to hold them down to the earth when the great storms rage. The country was wild and rocky about here, but there were plenty of trees, plenty of moss, and

Away off on the opposite shore of the lake we could see some villages, and now for the first time we could observe the real difference between their proportions and those of the giant mountains at whose feet they slept. When one is in one of those villages it seems spacious, and its houses seem high and not out of preportion to the mountain that overhangs them-but from our altitude, what a change! The mountains were bigger and grander than ever, as they stood there thinking their solemn thoughts with their heads in the drifting clouds, but the villages at their feet-when the pains-taking eye could trace them up and find them-were so reduced, so almost invisible, and lay so flat against the ground, that the exactest simile I can devise is to compare them to ant-deposits of granulated dirt over-shadowed by the huge bulk of a cathedral. The steamboats skimming along under the stupendous precipices were diminished by distance to the daintiest little toys, the sail-boats and row boats to shallops proper for fairies that keep house in the cups of lilies and ride to court on the backs of bumble-bees

Presently we came upon half a dozen sheep nibbling grass in the spray of a stream of clear water that sprang from a rock wall a hundred feet high, and all at once our ears were startled with a melodious 'Lul...l...lul-lul-lahes-o-o-o !" pealing joyously from a near but invisible source, and recognized that we were hearing for the tirse time the famous Alpine jodel in its own native wilds. And we recognized, also, that it was that sort of quaint commingling of baritone and falsetto which at home we call Tyrolese warbling.

The jodling (pronounced yodling-emphasis on the o,) continued, and was very pleasant and inspiriting to hear. Now the jodier appeared-a shepherd boy of sixteen-and in our gladness and gratitude we gave him a franc to jodel some more. So he jodled and we listened. We moved on, presently, and he generously jodled us out of sight. After about fifteen minutes we came across another shepherd boy who was jodling and gave him half a franc to keep it up. He also jedled us out of sight. After that, we found a jodler every ten minutes; we gave the first one eight cents, the second one six cents, the third one four, the fourth one a penny, contributed nothing to Nos. 5, 6, and 7, and during the remainder of the day hired the rest of the jodlers, at a franc apiece, not to jodel any more. There is somewhat too much of this jodling in the Alps.

About the middle of the afternoon we passed through a prodigious natural gateway called the Felsenthor, formed by two enormous upright rocks, with a third lying across the top. There was a very attractive little hotel close by, but our energies were not conquered yet, so we went on.

Three hours afterwards we came to the railway track. It was planted straight up the mountain with the slant of a ladder that leans against a house, and it seemed to us that a man would need good nerves who proposed to travel up it or down it either.

During the latter part of the afternoon we cooled our roasting interiors with ice-cold water from clear streams, the only really satisfying water we had tasted since we left home, for at the hotels on the continent they merely give you a tumbler of ice to soak your water in, and that only modifies its hotness, doesn't make it cold. Water can only be made cold enough for summer comfort by boing prepared in a refrigerator or a closed ice-pitcher. Europeans say ice water impairs d. estion. How do they know? they never drink any.

At ten minutes past six we reached the Kaltbad station, where there is a spacious hotel with great verandahs which command a majestic expanse of lake and mountain scenery. We were pretty well fagged out, now, but as we did not wish to miss the Alpine surrise, we got through with our dinner as quickly as possible and hurried off to bed. It was unspeakably comfortable to stretch our weary limbs between t did slee pedestr In th out of atrippe suffered was alr Wed > accusin said if we had ha. m very w sit up that w care of having Duri little,

in the

left to

roused the ha blasts WAS AU said th did no bed-bl Indian mantic ed on ing an solemi messe would So it we We the la journe away yards one ti the of with : ter, a a rock emos shoul Harri 28 1181 thing had m

W٥

afford climb but t It can earne WES

the o

earing for the del in its own ted, also, that mmingling of home we call ling-emphas very pleas-ow the jodier sixteen-und ve gave him a he jodled and resently, and sight. After cross another and gave him e also jedled we found a gave the first ne six cents, ne a penny 6, and 7, and day hired the piece, not to mewhat too afternoon we ural gateway by two enorl lying across ractive little ies were not came to the straight up a ladder that eemed to us ves who proeither. fternoon we with ice-cold only ready since we left ntinent they ice to soak modifies its Water can immer comgerator or a ay ice water y know ?-

reached the a spacious h command d mountain rell fagged not wish ot through ossible and nspeakably limbs between the cool damp sheets. And how we did sleep !—for there is no opiate like Alpine

In the morning we both awoke and leaped out of bed at the same instant and ran and stripped aside the window curtain; but we suffered a bitter disappointment again: it was already half past three in the afternoon.

We dressed sullenly and in ill spirits, each accusing the other of over-sleeping. Harris said if we had brought the courier along, as we had ought to have done, we should not ha. missed these sunrises. I said he knew very well that one of us would have had to sit up and wake the courier; and I added that we were having trouble enough to take care of ourselves, on this climb, without having to take care of a courier besides.

During breakfast our spirits came up a little, since we found by the guide-book that in the hotels on the summit the tourist is not left to trust to luck for his sunrise, but is roused betimes by a man who goes through the halls with a great Alpine horn, blowing blasts that would raise the dead. And there was another consoling thing: the guide-book said that up there on the summit the guests did not wait to dress much, but seized a red bed-blanket and sailed out arrayed like an Indian. This was good; this would be remantic; two hundred and fifty people grouped on the windy summit, with their hair flying and their red blankets flapping, in the solemn presence of the snowy ranges and the messenger splendours of the coming sun, would be a striking and memorable spectacle. So it was good luck, not ill luck, that we had missed those other sunrises.

We were informed by the guide-book that we were now 3,228 feet above the level of the lake, -therefore full two-thirds of our journey had been accomplished. We got away at a quarter past four p.m.; a hundred yards above the hotel the railway divided; one track went straight up the steer hill, the other one turned square off to the right, with a very slight grade. We took the lat-ter, and followed it more than a mile, turned a rocky corner and came in sight of a handsome new hotel. If we had gone on, we should have arrived at the summit, but Harris preferred to ask: a lot of questions as usual, of a man who didn't know anything—and he told us to go back and follow the other route. We did so. We could ill afford this loss of time.

We climbed, and climbed; and we kept on climbing; we reached about forty summits, but there was always another one just ahead. It came on to rain, and it rained in dead carnest. We were soaked through, and it earnest. We were soaked through, and it of lights we had often seen glinting was bitter cold. Next a smoky fog of clouds high aloft among the stars from our balcony covered the whole region densely, and we took to the railway ties to keep from getting lost. Sometimes we slopped along in a narrow path on the left hand side of the track, but by and by when the fog blew aside a little, and we saw that we were treading the rampant of a precipice and that our left-elbows were projecting over a perfectly boundless and bottomless vacancy, we gasped, and jumped for the ties again.

The night shut down, dark and drizzly and cold. About eight in the evening the fog lifted and showed us a well-worn path which led up a very steep rise to the left. We took it, and as soon as we had got far enough from the railway to render the find-ing it again an impossibility, the fog shut down on us once more.

We were in a bleak, unsheltered place now, and had to trudge right along, in order to keep warm, though we rather expected to go over a precipice sconer or later. About nine o'clock we made an important discovery—that we were not in any path. We groped around a while or our hands and knees, but could not find it; so we sat down in the mud and the wet grass to wait. We were terrified into this by being suddenly confronted with a vast body which showed itself vaguely for an instant, and in the next instant was smothered in the fog again. It was really the hotel we were after, monstrougly magnified by the fog, but we took it for the face of a precipice, and decided not to try to claw it up.

We sat there an hour, with chattering teeth and quivering bodies, and quarrelled over all sorts of trifles, but gave most of our attention to abusing each other for the stupidity of deserting the railway track. We sat with our backs to that precipioe, because what little wind there was came from that quarter. At some time or other the fog thinned a little ; we did not know when, for we were facing the empty universe and the thinness could not show; but at last Harris happened to look around, and, there stood a huge, dim, spectral hotel where the precipice had been. One could faintly discern the windows and chimneys, and a dull olur of lights. Our first emotion was deen unnetter. lights. Our first emotion was deep, unutterable gratitude, our next was a foolish rage, born of the suspicion that possibly the hotel had been visible three quarters of an hour while we sat there in those cold puddles quarrelling.

Yes, it was the Rigi-Kulm hotel the one that occupies the summit, and whose remote little sparkle away down yonder in Lucerne. The crusty portier and crusty clerks gave us the surly reception which their kind deal in in prosperous times, but by mollifying them with an extra display of obsequiousness and servility we finally got them to show us to a room which our boy had engaged for us.

We got into some dry clothing, and while our supper was preparing we loafed for-sakenly through a couple of vast cavernous drawing rooms, one of which had a stove in This stove was in a corner, and densely led around with people. We could not walled around with people. get near the fire, so we moved at large in the arctic spaces, among a multitude of people who sat silent, emileless, forlorn and shivering—thinking what fools they were to come, perhaps. There were some Americans, and some Germans, but one could see that the great majority were Euglish.

We longed into an apartment where there was a great crowd, to see what was going on. It was a memento-magazine. The tourists were eagerly buying all sorts and styles of paper cutters marked 'Souvenir of the Rigi," with handles made of the little curved horn of the ostensible chamois; there were all manner of wooden goblets and such things, similarly marked. I was going to buy a paper-cutter, but I believed I could remember the cold comfort of the Rigi-Kulm without it, so I smothered the impulse.

Supper warmed us, and we went immediately to bed—but first, as Mr. Baedeker requests all tourists to call his attention to any errors which they may find in his guide-books, I dropped him a line to inform him that when he said the foot-journey from Waggis to the summit was only three hours and a quarter, he missed it by just about three I had previously informed him of his mistake about the distance from Allerheiligen to Oppeneau, and had also informed the Ordnance Department of the German Government of the same error in the imperial maps. I will add, here, that I never got any answer to these letters, or any thanks from either of those sources; and what is still more discourteous, these corrections have not been made, either in the maps or the guide books. But I will write again when I get time, for my letters may have miscarried.

We curled up in the clammy beds, and went to sleep without rocking. We were so sodden with fatigue that we never stirred nor turned over till the booming blasts of the Alpine horn aroused us. It may well be imagined that we did not lose any time. We snatched on a few odds and ends of clothing, cocooned ourselves in the proper red blankets, and plunged along the halls and out into the whistling wind bare-headed. We were the could be desired and the weeks and the will a lewes the very peak of the summit, a hundred yards away, and made for it. We rushed up the stairs to the top of this scaf folding, and stood there, above the vast out-lying world, with hair flying and ruddy blankets waiving and cracking in the fierce

'Fifteen minutes too late, 'at last!' said Harris, in a vexed voice. 'The sun is clear above the horizon.'

'No matter,' I said, 'it is a most magnificent spectacle, and we will see it do the rest of its rising, anyway."

In a moment we were deeply absorbed in the marvel before us, and dead to everything The great cloud-barred disc of the sun stood just above a limitless expanse of tossing white-caps—so to speak—a billowy chaos of massy mountain domes and peaks draped in imperishable snow, and flooded with an opaline glory of changing and dissolving splen-dours, whilst through rifts in a black cloudbank above the sun, radiating lances of diamond dust shot to the zenith. The cloven valleys of the lower world swam in a tinted mist which veiled the ruggedness of their crage and ribs and ragged forests, and turned all the forbidding region into a soft and rich and sensuous paradise.

We could not speak. We could hardly breathe. We could only gaze in drunken ecstacy and drink it in. Presently Harris exclaimed--nation, its going down!" Perfectly true. We had missed the morning horn-blow, and slept all day. This was stupefying. Harris said -

Look here, the sun isn't the spectacleits us-stacked up here on top of this gallows, in these idiotic blankets, and two hundred and fifty well dressed men and women down here gawking up at us and not caring a straw whether the sun rises or sets, as long as they've got such a ridiculous spectacle as this to set down in their memorandum-books. They seem to be laughing their ribs loose and there's one girl there that appears to be going all to pieces. I never saw such a man as you before. I think you are the very last possibility in the way of an

'What have I done?' I answered with

What have you done? You've got up at half past seven o'clock in the evening to see the sun rise, that's what you've done.

'And have you done any better, I'd like to know ! I always used to get up with the lark, till I came under the petrifying influ-of your turgid intellect."

'You used to get up with the lark -- O, no doubtof these ed to ! blanket the Alp to boot tion of

And When t back to and we ed the tried to supoun but for missed solar re for whi hear hi alive.

He

and in and w the ma quakin in the and bi sleepy gloom could shook people Amer ing pe have peopl tage, morn Whil a 'rat hitch Was I drew .0 out a > view. Th cheer gran the t stars Full hude light wait Alp light of e > > dege

on the a hunit. We this scaf the vast nd ruddy the fierce st!' said ın is clear

t magnifilo the rest

psorbed in of the sun of tossing y chaos of draped in th an oparing splen. ack oloudhe cloven in a tinted ss of their and turned t and rich uld hardly runken ec-Harris ex-

Wn ! " the morn-This was pectaclethis galtwo hund women ot caring sets, as s spectanemoranhing their that ap. lever eaw you are red with got up at

ay of an

ng to see 18. I'd like with the ng influ-

-Q, no

doubt-you'll get up with the hangman one of these days. But you ought to be ashamed to be jawing here like this, in a red blanket, on a forty foot scaffold on top of the Alps. And no end of people down here to boot; this isn't any place for an exhibition of temper. tion of temper.

And so the customary quarrel went on. When the sun was fairly down, we slipped hack to the hotel in the charitable gloaming, and went to bed again. We had encounter ed the horn blower on the way, and he had tried to collect compensation, not only for announcing the sunset, which we did see, but for the sunset, which we had totally missed; but we said no, we only took our solar rations on the European plan '-pay for what you get. He promised to make us hear his horn in the morning, if we were

CHAPTER XXIX.

He kept his word. We heard his horn and instantly got up. It was dark and cold and wretched. As I fumbled around for the matches, knocking things down with my quaking hands, I wished the sun would rise in the middle of the day, when it was warm and bright and cheerful, and one wasn't sleepy. We proceeded to dress by the gloom of a couple of sickly candles, but we could hardly button anything, our hands shook so. I thought of how many happy people there were in Europe, Asia and America, and everywhere, who were sleeping peacefully in their beds and did not have to get up and see the Rigi sunrisements by did not appreciate their sdyan. people who did not appreciate their advantage, as like as not, but would get up in the morning wanting more boons of Providence. While thinking these thoughts I yawned, in a rather ample way, and my teeth got hitched on a nail over the door, and whilst I was mounting a chair to free myself, Harris drew the window curtain and said :-

'O, this is luck! We shau't have to go out at all-yonder are the mountains, in full

That was glad news, indeed. It made us One could see the cheerful right away. grand Alpine masses dimly outlined against the block firmanent, and one or two faint stars blinking through rifts in the night. Fully eloched, and wrapped in blankets, we huddled curselves up by the window with lighted pipes, and fell into chat, while we waited in exceeding comfort to see how an Alphe sunrise was going to look by candle light. By and by, a delicate, spiritual sort of effulgence spread itselt by imperceptible degrees over the loftiest altitudes of the sharply worked out and finished as a steel anowy wastes-but there the effort seemed to stop. I said presently :where. It doesn't seem to go. What do you reckon is the matter with it?'

'I don't know. It appears to hang fire somewhere. I never saw a sunrise like that before. Can it be that the hotel is playing of course not. The hotel merely has a property interest in the sun, it has nothing to do with the management of it. It is a precarious kind of property, too; a succession of total colipses would probably ruin this tavern. Now, what can be the matter with this sunrise?

Harris jumped up and said :-

'I've got it! I know what's the matter with it! We've been looking at the place where the sun set last night?'

'It is perfectly true! Why couldn't you have thought of it sconer? Now we've lost another one! And all through your blundering. It was exactly like you to light a pipe and sit down to wait for the sun to rise in the west.

'It was exactly like me to find out the mistake, too. You would never have found it out. I find out all the mistakes,'

You make them all, too, else your most valuable faculty would be wasted on you. But don't stop to quarrel now, maybe we are not too late yet.

But we were. The sun was well up when we got to the exhibition ground.

On our way up we met the crowd returning-men and women dressed in all sorts of queer costumes, and exhibiting all degrees of cold and wretchedness in their gaits and A dozen still remained on countenances. the ground when we reached there, huddled together about the scaffold with their backs They had their redto the bitter wind. guide books open at the diagram of the view, and were painfully picking out the several mountains and trying to impress their names and positions on their memories. It was one of the saddest sights I ever saw.

Two sides of this place were guarded bn railings, to keep people from being blowy over the precipices. The view, looking sheer down into the broad valley eastward, from this great elevation-almost a perpendicular mile—was very quaint and curious. Counties, towns, hilly ribs and ridges, wide stretches of green meadow, great forest tracts, winding streams, a dozen blue lakes, a flock of busy steamboats—we saw all this little world in unique circumstantiality of detail—saw it just as the birds see it—and all reduced to the smallest of scales and as engraving. The numerous toy villages, with tiny spires projecting out of them, were just as the children might have left them when done with play the day before; the forest tracts were diminished to cushions of moss; one or two big lakes were dwarfed to ponds, the smaller ones to nuddles-though they did not look like puddles, but like blue ear-drops which had fallen and lodged in slight depressions, conformable to their shapes, among the moss buds and the smooth levels of deinty green farm-land; the microscopic steamboats glided along, as in a city reservoir, taking a mighty time to cover the distance between ports which seemed only a yard arard; and the isthmus which separated two lakes looked as if one might atretch out on it and lie with both elbows in the water; yet we knew invisible waggons were toiling across it and finding the dis-tance a tedious one. This beautiful ministure world had . xactly the appearance of those 'relief maps' which reproduce nature precisely, with the heights and depressions and other details graduate 2 to a reduced scale, and with the rocks, trees, lakes, etc., coloured after na u >

I believed we could walk down to Waggis or Vitznau in a day, but I knew we could go down by rail in about an hour, so I chose the latter method. I wanted to see what it was like, anyway. The train came along about the middle of the forencon, and an odd thing it was. The lo omotive boiler atood on end, and it and the whole locomotive were tilted sharply backward. There was two passages was a world but wide were two passenger cars, roofed, but wide open all round. These cars were not tilted back, but the seats were; this enables the passengers to sit level while going down a steep incline,

There are three railway tracks; the central one is clogged; the 'lantern wheel' of the engine grips its way along these cogs, and pulls the train up the hill or retards its motion on the down trip. About the same speed-three miles an hour - is maintained both ways. Whether going up or down, the locomotive is always at the lower end of the train. It pushes, in the one case, braces back in the other. The passenger rides backward, going up, and faces forward going

We got front seats, and while the train moved along about fifty yards on level ground, I was not the least frightened; but now it started abruptly down stairs, and I caught my breath. And I, like my neighbours, unconsciously held back all I could, and threw my weight to the rear, but of course that did no particular good. I had alidden down the balusters when I was a boy, and thought nothing offit, but to slide down the balusters in a railway train is a thing to make one's flesh creep. Sometimewe had at much as ten yards of also most level ground, and this gave us a few full breaths in comfort; but straightway we would turn a corner and see a long steep live of rails stretching down below us, and the comfort was at an end. One expected to see the locomotive pause, or slack up a little, and approach this plunge cautiously, but it did nothing of the kind; it went came, on, and when it reached the jumpinging off place it made a sudden bow, and went gliding smoothly down stairs, untronbled by the circumstances.

It was wildly exhibarating to slide along the edge of the precipices, after this grisly fashion and look arai, ht down upon that far-off valley which I was describing a while

There was no level ground at the Kaitbab station; the rail-bed was as steep as a rock; I was curious to see how the stop was going to be managed. But it was very, simple: the train came sliding down and when it reached the right spot it just stopped—that was all there was 'to it '-stopped on the steep incline, and when the exchange of passengers and baggage had been made, it moved off and went sliding down again. The train can be stopped anywhere at a moment's notice.

There was one curious effect, which I need not take the trouble to describe - because I can seissor a description of it out of the railway company's advertising pamphlet, and save my ink:

On the whole tour, particularly at the Descent, we undergo an optical illusion which often seems to be incredible. All the shrubs, fir-trees, stables, houses, etc., seem to be bent in a slanting direction, as by an immense pressure of air. They are all standing awry, so much awry that the chalets and cottages of the peasants seem to be tumbling down. It is the consequence of the steep inclination of the line. Those who are seated in the carriage do not observe that they are going down a declivity of 20 to 25° (their seats being bent down at their backs) They mistake their carriage and its horizontal lines for a proper measure of the normal plain, and therefore all the objects outside which really are in a horizontal position, must show a disproportion of 20 to 25° declivity, in regard to the mountain.'
By the time one reaches Kalthad, he has acquired confidence in the railway, and he now ceases to try to ease the locomotive by holding back. Thenceforward he smokes holding back. Thenceforward he smokes his pipe in serenity, and gazes out upon the magn with 1 ing to Howe where is wh Bridg gossa over a On sins v bridg he se need fectly So

to th

An again rest who Euro Th perce

Furk

teras

diate these in fa not 1 that neve or in I to g and resu ed ! poss the the tak H aho tho car Į e del a c wh

tur

mu

to slide train is a sometimesof als us a few raightway long steep v us, and expected ack up a sutiously, it wents jumpingbow, and untroub-lide along this grisly upon that ug a while

he Kaitbab
as a rock;
was going
vas very,
ling down
ight spot
re was to,
and when aggage had ent sliding opped any-

hich I need because I cut of the uphlet, and
arly at the sal 'illusion

e. All the eto., seem n, as by an ey are all that the nts seem to equence of ne. Those ot observe ivity of 20 wn at their age and its sure of the the objects horizontal on of 20 to intain.

ad, he has ay, and he omotive by he smokes t upon the magnificent picture below and about him with unfettered enjoyment. There is nothing to interrupt the view or the breeze; it is like inspecting the world on the wing. However—to be exact—there is one place where the serenity lapses for a while: this is while one is crossing the Schnurrtobel Bridge, a frail atructure which swings its gossamer frame down through the dizzy air, over a gorge, like a vagrant spider-strand.

over a gorge, like a vagrant spider-strend.

One has no difficulty in remembering his sins white the train is creeping down this bridge; and he repents of them, too; though he sees, when he gets to Vitznau, that he need not have done it—the bridge was perfectly safe.

So ends the eventful trip which we made to the Rigi-Kulm to see an Alpine sunrise.

CHAPTER XXX.

An hour's sail brought us to Lucerne again. I judged it best to go to bed and rest several days, for I knew that the man who undertakes to make the tour of Europe on foot must take care of himself.

Thinking over my plans, as mapped out, I perceived that they did not take in the Furka Pass, the Rnone Glacier, the Finsteraarhorn, the Wetterhorn, etc. I immediately examined the guide book to see if these were important, and found they were; in fact, a pedestrian tour of Europe could not be complete without them. Of course that decided me at once to see them, for I never allow myself to do things by halves, or in a slurring, slip-shod way.

I called in my agent and instructed him to go without delay and make a careful examination of these noted places, on foot, and bring me back a written report of the result, for insertion in my book. I instructed him to go to Hospeothal as quickly as possible, and make his grand start from there; to extend his foot expedition as far as the Giesbach fall, and return to me from thence by diligence or mule. I told him to take the courier with him.

He objected to the courier, and with some show of reason, since he was about to venture upon new and untried ground; but I thought he might as well learn how to take care of the courier now as later, therefore I enforced my point. I said that the trouble, delay and inconvenience of travelling with a courier were balanced by the deep respect which a courier's presence commands, and I must insist that as much style be thrown into my journeys as possible.

So the two assumed complete mountaineering costumes and departed. A week later light to mark the hand of man, except the they returned, pretty well used up, and my agent handed me the following

OFFICIAL REPORT

Of a Visit to the Furka Region. By H. Harris, Agent.

About 7 o'clock in the morning, with perfectly fine: weather, we started from Hospenthal, and arrived at the 'maison' on the Furka in a little under 'quatre' hours. The want of variety in the reenery from Hospenthal made the 'kahkahponeeka' wearisome; but let none be discouraged; no one can fail to be completely 'recompensed' for his fatigue, when he sees, for the first time, the monarch of the Oberland, the tremendous Finetersarhess. A moment before all was dullness, but a 'pas' further has placed us on the summit of the Furka; and exactly in front of us, at a 'hopow' of only fifteen miles, this magnificent mountain lifts its anow-wreathed precipices into the deep blue sky. The inferior mountains on each side of the pass form a sort of frame for the picture of their dread lord, and close in the view so completely that no other prominent feature in the Oberland is visible from this boog-a-bong'; nothing withdraws the attention from the solitary grandeur of the Finstersarhorn and the dependent spure which form the abutments of the central neak

With the addition of some others, who were also bound for the Grimsel, we formed a large 'xhvloj' as we descended the 'steg' which winds round the shoulder of a mountain toward the Rhone glacier. We soon left the path and took to the ice; and after wandering amongst the crevices 'un pen' to admire the wonders of these deep blue caverns, and hear the rushing of waters through their subglacial channels, we struck out a course towards 'l'autre cote' and crossed the glacier successfully, a little above the cave from which the infant Rhone takes its first bound from under the grand precipice of ice. Half a mile below this we began to climb the flowery side of the Mcienwand. One of our party started before the rest, but the 'Hitze' was so great, that we found 'ihm' quite exhausted, and lying at full length in the shade of a large 'Gestein.' We sat down with him for a time, for all felt the heat excaedingly in the climb up this very steep bolwoggoly, and then we set out again together, and arrived at last near the Dead Man's Like, at the foot of the Sidelhorn. This louely spot, once used for an extempore burying place, after a sanguinary 'battue' tetween the French and Austrians, is the perfection of desolation ; there is nothing in line of weather-beaten whitened poets, set up to indicate the direction of the pass in the owdawakk'of winter. Near this point the footpath joins the wider track, which con-nects the Grimsel with the head of the 'schnawp: 'this has been carefully constructed, and leads with a tortuous course among and over 'les pierres,' down to the bank of the gloomy little 'swosh-swosh,' which almost washes against the walls of the Grimsel We arrived a little before o'clock at the end of our day's journey, hot enough to justify the step, taken by most of the 'partie.' of plunging into the crystal water of the snow fed lake.

The next afternoon we started for a walk up the Untersar glacier, with the intention of, at all events, getting as far as the 'Hutte which is used as a sleeping place by most of those who cross the Strahleck Pass to Galelwald. We got over the tedious collead of stones and 'debris' which covers nearly these hours from Grimsel, when, just as we were thinking of crossing over to the right, to climb the cliffs at the foot of the hut, the clouds, which had for some time assumed a threatening appearance, suddenly dropped, and a huge mass of them, driving towards us from the Finsteraarhorn, poured down a deluge of 'haboolong' and hail. Fortunately, we were not far from a very large glacier table; it was a huge rock balanced on a pedestal of ice high enough to admit of our all creeping under it for 'gowkarak.' A stream of 'puckittypukk ' had turrowed a course for itself in the ice at its base, and we were obliged to stand with one 'Fuss' on each side of this, and endeavour to keep ourselves 'chaud' by cutting steps in the steep bank of the pedestal, to as to get a higher place for standing on, as the 'wasser' rose rapidly in its trench. A very cold 'bzzzzzzzzeeeee' accompanied the storm, and made our position far from pleasant; and presently came a flash of Bitzen, apparently in the middle of our little party, with an instantaneous clap of 'yokky,' sounding like a large gun fired close to our ears: the effect was startling, but in a few seconds our attention was fixed by the roaring echoes of the thunder against the tremendous mountains which completely surrounded us. This was followed by many more hursts, none of 'welche,' however, was so dangerously near; and after waiting a long 'demi'-hour in our icy prison, we sallied out to walk through a 'haboolong' though not so heavy as before, was quite enough to give us a thorough soaking before our arrival at the Hospice.

place; situated at the bottom of a sort of huge crater, the sides of which are utterly savage 'Gebirge,' composed of barren rocks which cannot even support a single pine 'arbre,' and affords only scanty food for a herd of 'gmwkwllolp,' it looks as if it must be completely 'begraben' in the winter snows. Enormous avalanches fall against it every spring, sometimes covering everything to the depth of thirty or forty feet; and, in spite of walls four feet thick, and furnished with outside iron shutters, the two men who stay here when the 'voyageurs' are snugly quartered in their distant homes, can tell you that the snow sometimes shakes the house to its Aundations.

Next morning the 'hogglebumgullup' still continued bad, but we made up our minds to go on, and make the best of it. Haif an hour after we started, the 'Regen' thickened unpleasantly, and we attempted to get shelter under a projecting rock, but being far too 'nass' already to make standing at all 'agreeable,' we pushed on for the Handeck, consoling ourselves with the reflection that from the furious rushing of the river Aar at our side, we should at all events see the cele-brated 'Wasserfall' in 'grande perfection.' Nor were we 'nappersocket' in our expectation; the water was roaring down its leap of 250 feet in a most magnificent frenzy, while the trees which cling to its rocky sides swayed to and fro in the violence of the hurricane which it brought down with it : even the stream, which falls into the main cascade at right angles, and 'toutfois' forms a beautiful feature in the scene, was now swollen into a raging torrent; and the violence of this meeting of the waters,' about fifty feet below the frail bridge where we stood, was fearfully grand. While we were looking at it, 'glucklicheweise' a gleam of sunshine came out, and instantly a beautiful rainbow was formed by the spray, and hung in mid air suspended over the awful go ge.

On going into the 'chalet' above the fall, we were informed that a 'Brucke' had broken down near Guttanen, and that it would be impossible to proceed for some time: accordingly we were kept in our drenched condition for 'eine Stunde,' when some 'voyageurs' arrived from Meyringen, and told us that there had been a trifling accident, 'aben' that we could now cross. On arriving at the spot, I was much inclined to suspect that the whole story was a ruse to make us 'slowwk' and drink the more in the Handeck Inn, for only a few planks had been carried away, and though there might perhaps have been some difficulty with mules, rarrival at the Hospice, the gap was certainly not larger than a The Grimsel is 'certainment' a wonderful 'mmogla' might cross with a very slight leap. happil oursel Reich at the

Nez spent to the gress its el blue froze who comp noon The perle and I ing i close dow boso the upor the Sch Visi' we han 6 BO WAS dor of t a t hor bu age thi

T

th

wh

be

mi

on di

W

a sort of re utterly ren rocks ogle pine if it must he winter against it verything ; and, in lurnished men who re anugly n tell you

e house to llup 'still minds to Half an thickened get shelter g far too g at all Handeck, ction that er Aar at e the celeerfection. r expectaits leap of uzy, while ides swayhurricane even the cascade at beautiful llen into a e of this y feet beg in mid the fall. ke' had i that it for some f in our e,' when eyringen, a trifling w cross. inclined a ruse to more in anks had re might h mules. than a y slight

tood, was looking at sunshine

rainbow

Near Guttanen the 'haboolong' happily ceased, and we had time to walk ourselves tolerably dry before arriving at Reichenbach, 'wo' we enjoyed a good 'dine' at the Hotel des Alps.

Next morning we walked to Rosenlaui, the 'beau ideal' of Swiss scenery, where we spent the middle of the day in an excursion to the glacier. This was more beautiful than words can describe, for in the constant progress of the ice it has changed the form of its extremity and formed a vast cavern, as blue as the sky sbove, and rippled like a frozen ocean. A few steps cut in the whoopjamboreehoo' enabled us to walk completely under this, and feast our eyes upon one of the levellest objects in creation. The glacier was all around divided by numberless fissures of the same exquisite colour, and the finest wood-'erdbeeren' were growing in abundance but a few yards from the ice. The inn stands in a 'charmant' spot close to the 'cote de la riviere,' which, lower down, forms the Reichenbach fall, and embosomed in the richest of pinewoods, while the fine form of the Wellhorn looking down upou it completes the enchanting 'topple.' In the atternoon we walked over the great Scheideck to Grindewald, stopping to pay a visit to the upper glacier by the way; but we were again overtaken by bad 'hoggle-bumgullup' and arrived at the hotel in 'solche' a state that the landlord's wardrobe was in great request.

The clouds by this time seemed to have done their worst, for a lovely day succeeded, which we determined to devote to an ascent of the Faulhorn. We left Grindewald just as a thunderstorm was dying away, and we hoped to find 'guten Wetter" up above; but the rain, which had nearly ceased, began again, and we were struck by the rapidly increasing 'froid' as we ascended. thirds of the way up were completed when the rain was exchanged for 'gnillic,' which the 'boden' was thickly covered, and before we arrived at the top the 'gnillic' and mist became so thick that we could not see one another at more than twenty 'poopoo' distance, and it became difficult to pick our way over the rough and thickly covered ground. Shivering with cold we turned into bed with a double allowance of clothes, and slept comfortably while the wind howled 'autour de la maison :' when I awoke, the wall and the window looked equally dark, but in another hour I found I could just see the form of the latter; so 1 jumped out of bed and forced it open, though with difficulty from the frost and the quantities of 'gnillic' heaped up against it.

A row of huge icicles bung down from the edge of the roof, and anything more wintry than the whole 'amblick' could not well be imagined; but the sudden appearance of the great mountains in front was so startling that I felt no inclination to move towards bed again. The snow which had collected upon 'la fenetre' had incressed the 'finsterupon his senecre had increased the inster-niss oder der dunkelheit,' so that when I looked out I was surprised to find that the daylight was considerable, and that the 'Bal-ragoomah' would evidently rise before long. Only the brightness of 'les atoiles' were still shining; the sky was cloudless overhead, though small curling miets lay thousands of feet below us in the valleys, wreathed around the feet of the mountains, and adding to the splendour of their lefty summits. We were soon dressed and out of the house, watching the gradual approach of dawn, thoroughly absorbed in the first near view of the Obe and giants, which broke up in us unexpectedly after the intense b-cu rity of the evening before 'Kabaugwakko songwashee Kum Wetterhorn snawpo! oried some one, as that grand summit gleamed with the first rose of dawn; and in a few moments the double crest of the Schreckhorn followed its example : peak after peak seemed warmed with life, the Jungfrau blushed even more beautifully than her neighbours, and soon, from the Wetter-horn in the East to the Wildstrubel in the West, a long row of fires glowed upon mighty altars, truly worthy of the gods. The 'wigw' was very severe; our sleeping place could hardly be 'distinguee' from the snow around it, which had fallen to the depth of a 'flirk' duringthe past evening and we heartily enjoyed a rough scramble 'en bas' to the Giesbach falls, where we soon found a warm climate. At noon the day before a Grindewald the thermometer could not have stood at less than 100° Fahr. in the sun; and in the evening, judging from the icicles formed, and the state of the windows, there must have been at least twelve 'dingblatter' of frost, thus giving a change of 80° dur.ng a few hours.

I said :

'You have done well, Harris; this report is concise, compact, well expressed; the language is crisp, the descriptions are vivid and not needlessly elaborated; your report goes straight to the point, attends strictly to. business, and doesn't fool around. It is in many ways an excellent document. But it has a fault—it is too learned—it is much too learned. What is 'dingblatter'?'

Dingblatter is a Fiji word meaning 'degrees.

' You know the English of it, then i"

'O, yes.'

'What is 'gnillio ?"

'That is the Esquimaux term for "snow." 'So you knew the English for that, too ?'

Why, certainly,

What does "mmbglx" stand for !

That is Zulu for pedestrian.

"While the ferm of the Wellhorn look. ing down upon it completes the enchanting bopule. What is 'bopple?"

Picture. It's Choctaw. What is 'schnawp ?'

'Valley. That is Chocktaw, also,'

What is 'bolwoggoly?'
That is Chinese for 'hill."

'Kahkaaponeeka ?'

Ascent. Choctaw.

But we were again overtaken by bad hogglebungullup." What does hogglebumgullup mean ?'

'That is Chinese for "weather."

'Is hogglebumguliup better than the English word? Is it any more descriptive?'
'No, it means just the same.'

'And dingblatter and gnillic-and bopple, and schnawp-are they any better than the English words ?'

'No, they mean just what the English ones do !

Then why do you use them? Why have you used all this Chinese and Choctaw and Zulu rubbish ?'

Because I didn't know any French but two or three words, and I didn't know any Latin or Greek at all.

'That is nothing. Why should you to use foreign words, anyhow?'

The adorn my page. They all do it.' Why should you want 'To adorn my page.

'Who is 'all ?"

Everybody. Everybody that writes elegantly. Anybody has a right to that wants to.

I then pro-'I think you are mistaken.' ceeded in the following scathing manner. When really learned men write books for other learned men to read, they are justified in using as many learned words as they please—their audience will understand them; but a man who writes a book for the general public to read is not justified in distiguring his pages with untranslated foreign expressions. It is an insolence toward the majority of the purchasers, for it is a very frank and impudent way of saying, "Get the translations made yourself, if you want them, this book is not written for the ignorant classes." There are men who know a foreign language so well and have used it so long in their daily life that they seem to discharge whole volleys of it into their English writings unconsciously, and so they omit to translate, as much as half the time. That man's readers. What is the excuse for this? The writer would say he only uses the foreign language where the delicacy of his point cannot be conveyed in English. Very well, then he writes his best things for the tenth man, and he ought to warn the other nine not to buy his book. However, the excuse he offers is at least an excuse; but there is another set of men who are like you : they know a word here and there, of a foreign language, or a few beggarly little three-word phrases, filched from the back of the dictionary, and these they are continually peppering into their literature, with a pretence of knowing that language—what excuse can they offer? The foreign words and phrases which they use have their exact equivalent in a nobler language—English; yet they think they "adorn their page" when they say Strasse for excet. and Bahnhof for rai way station, and so on-flaunting these fluttering rags of poverty in the reader's face, and imagining he will be ass enough to take them for the sign of untold riches held in reserve. I will be your "learning" remain in your 1 port; you have as much right, I suppose, to "adorn your page" with Zulu and Chinese and Choctaw rubbish, as others of your sort have to adorn theirs with insolent odds and ends smouched from half a dozen learned tongues whose a-b abs they don't even know.'

of r

of t

awi

snu

ing

gab

ing

wit

mu

of I the alo

poi

nat

of t

ing

gre

ded

604 ohs

COL api

Fr

do

to

an ou 60 its

ta

th

th

tr

lif

E

he re

fi

hi

of 18

ti

When the musing spider steps upon the red hot shovel, he first exhibits a wild surprise, then he shrivels up. Similar was the effect of these blistering words upon the tranquil and unsuspecting agent. I can be dreadfully rough on a person when the mood takes me.

CHAPTER XXXL

We are now prepared for a considerable walk,-from Lucerne to Interlaken, over the Brunig Pass. But at the last moment the weather was so good that I changed my mind and hired a four horse carriage. was a buge vehicle, roomy, as easy in its motion as a palanquin, and exceedingly comfortable.

We got away pretty early in the morning, after a hot breakfast, and went bowling along over a hard, smooth road, through the summer loveliness of Switzerland, with near and distant lakes and mountains before and about us for the entertainment of the eye, and the music of multitudinous birds to charm the ear. Sometimes there was only the width of the road between the imposing precipices on the right and the clear cool water on the left with its shoals of uncatchis a great cruelty to nine out of ten of the able fishes skimming about shrough the bars of sun and shadow; and sometimes, in place of the precipices, the grassy land atretched away, in an apparently endless upward slant, and was dotted everywhere with xcuse for

only uses elicacy of English.

things for warn the However,

a excuse 2 o are like

here, of a se back of continuale, with a ge-what foreign

have their

ge—Eng-lorn their

treet. and

d so onoverty in

will be ass

ei untold

ort ; you

nese and

sort have and ends

i tongues w.

upon the wild sur-

was the

upon the

I can be

the mood

siderable

over the

nent the oged my age. It

gly com-

motning,

bowling

ough the

with near fore and the eye,

birds to

was only imposing

ear cool

uncatch-

the bars

sing little chalets, the prouliarly captivating cottage of Switzerland.

The ordinary chalet turns a broad, honest pable end to the road, and its ample roof hovers over the home in a protecting caressing way, projecting it sheltering eaves far outward. The quaint windows are filled with little panes, and garnished with white muslin curtains, and brightened with boxes of blooming flowers. Across the front of the house, and up the spreading eaves and along the fanciful railings of the shallow porch, are elaborate carvings, wreaths, fruits, arabesques, verses from Scripture, names, dates, etc. The building is whilly of wood, reduish brown in tint, a very pleasing colour. It generally has vines climbing over it. Set such a house against the freen green of the hillside, and it looks ever so cosy and inviting and picturesque, and is a decidedly graceful addition to the land-

One does not find out what a hold the chalet has taken upon him until he presently comes upon a new house,—a house which is aping the town fashions of Germany and France, a prim, hideous, straight up and down thing, plastered all over on the outside to look like stone, and altogether so stiff, and formal, and ugly and forbidding, and so out of tune with the gracious landscape, and so deaf and dumb and dead to the poetry c its surroundings, that it suggests an undertaker at a pic-nic, a corpae at a wedding, a Puritan in Paradise.

In the course of the morning we passed the spot where Pontina Pilate is said to have thrown himself into the lake. The legend thrown himself into the lake. goes that after the Crucifixion his conscience troubled him, and he fied from Jerasalem and wandered about the earth, weary of life and a prey to tortures of the mind. Eventually he hid himself away, on the heights of Mount Pilatus, and dwelt alone among the clouds and crags for years; but rest and peace were still denied him, so he finally put an end to his misery by drowning himselt.

Presently we passed the place where a man of better odour was born. This was the children's friend, Santa Claus, or St. Nicholas. There are some unaccountable reputations in the world. This saint's is an instance. He has ranked for ages as the peculiar friend of children, yet it appears he was not much of a friend to his own. He had ten of them, and when fifty years old he left them, and sought out as dismal a refuge from the work!

as possible, and became a hermit in order that he might reflect upon pions themes without being disturbed by the jayous and other noises from the nursery, doubtless.

Judging by Pilate and St. Nicholas, there exists no rule for the construction of hermits, they reem made out of all kinds of materials But Pilate attended to the matter of expiating his sin while he was alive, whereas St. Nicholas will probably have to go ou climbing down sooty chimneys, Christmas Eve, forever, and conferring kindnesses on the grant of the state of the st other people's children, to make up for deserting his own. His bones are kept in a church in a village (Sachseln,) which we visited, and are naturally held in great reverence. His portrait is common in the farm houses of the region, but is believed by many to be but an indifferent likeness. During his hermit life, according to the legend, he par-took of the bread and wine of the commu-nion once a month, but all the rest of the month he fasted.

A constant marvel with us, as we sped along the bases of the steep mountains on this journey, was, not that avalanches occur, but that they are not occurring all the time. One does not understand why rocks and land slides do not plunge down these de-clivities daily. A landalip occurred three quarters of a century ago, on the route from Arth to Brunnen, which was a formidable thing. A mass of conglomerate two miles long, a thousand feet broad and a hundred feet thick, broke away from a cliff three thousand feet high and hurled itself into the valley below, burying four villages and five windred people, as in a grave.

We had such a beautiful day, and such endless pictures of limpid lakes, and green hills and valleys, and majestic mountains, and milky cataracts dancing down the steeps and gleaming in the sun, that we could not help feeling sweet toward all the world, so we tried to drink all the milk, and eat all the grapes and apricots and berries, and buy all the bouquets of wild flowers which the little peasant boys and girls offered for sale, but we had to retire from this contract, for it was too heavy. At short distances—and they were entirely too short all along the road were groups of nest and comely children, with their wares nicely and temptingly set forth in the grass under the shade trees, and as soon as we approached they awarmed into the road, holding out their baskets and milk bottles, and ran beside the carriage, barefoot and bareheaded and importuned us to buy. They seldom desisted early, but continued to run and insist-beside the waggon while they could, and behind it until they lost breath. Then they turned and chased a returning carriage back to their trading poet again. After several hours of this, without my intermission, it ecomes almost annoying. I do not know what we should have done without the returning carriages to draw off the pur-buit. However, there were plenty of these, loaded with dusty tourists and piled high Indeed, from Lucerne to Inwith luggage. terlaken we had the spectacle, among other scenery, of an unbroken procession of fruit pedlars and tourist carriages.

Our talk was mostly auticipatory of what we should see on the down grade of the Brunig, by and by, after we should pass the aummit. All our friends in Luceine had said that to look down upon Meiringen, and the rushing blue gray river Asr, and the broad level green valley; and across at the mighty Alpine precipices that rise straight up to the clouds out of that valley; and up at the microscopic chalets perched upon the dizzy caves of those precipiess and wink-ing dimly and fitfully through the drifting veil of vapour ; and still up and up, at the the other Oltschibach and auperb beautiful two beautiful cascades that from those rugged heights, robed leap powdery spray, ruffled with foam, and girdled with sainbows—to look upon these things, they said, was to look upon the last possibility of the sublime and the enchanting. Therefore, as I say, we talked mainly of these coming wonders; if we were conscious of any impatience, it was to get there in favourable season; if we felt any anxiety, it was that the day might remain perfect, and enable us to see those marvels at their best,

As we approached the Kaiserstuhl, a part of the harness gave away. We were in dis-tress for a moment, but only a moment. It was the fore and aft gear that was broken the thing that leads aft from the forward part of the horse and is made fast to the thing that pulls the waggon. In America this would have been a heavy leathern strap; but, all over the continent it is nothing but a piece of rope the size of your little fingerclothes line is what it is. Cabs use it, private carriages, freight carts and waggons, all sorts of vehicles have it. In Munich I afterwards saw it used on a long waggon laden with fifty four half-barrels of beer; I had before noticed that the cabs in Heidelberg used it ; -not new rope, but rope that had been in use since Abraham's time-and I had felt nervous, sometimes, behind it when the cab was tearing down a hill. But I had long been accustomed to it now, and had even became afraid of the leather strap which belonged in its place. Our driver got a fresh piece of clother-line out of his locker and repaired the break in two minutes.

So much for one European fashion. Every country has its own ways. It may interest the reader to know how they 'put horses to' on the centinent. The man stands up the horses or each side of the thing that projec's from the front end of the waggon, and then throws the tangled mess of gear on top of the horses, and passes the thing that goes forward, through a ring, and haus it aft, and passes the other thing through the other ring and han's it aft on the other side of the other horse, opposite to the first one, after crossing them and bringing the loose end backand then buckles the other thing underneath the horse, and takes another thing and wraps it around the thing I spoke of before, and puts another thing over each horse's head, with broad flappers to it to keep the dust ont of the horses eyes, and puts the iron thing in his mouth for him to grit his teeth on, up hill, and brings the ends of these things aft over his back, after buckling another one around under his neck to hold his head up, and hitching another thing on a thing that goes over his shoulders to keep his head up when he is climbing a bill, and then takes the slack of the thing which I mentioned a while ago, and fetches it aft and makes it fast to the thing that pulls the waggen, and hands the other things up to the driver to steer with. I never have buckled up a horse myself, but I do not think we do it that way.

h bo

ou

of hi

of

for

ve

th

pr

AT

en

W

tai

lo

84 far

br

an

Wa

tal

Th

We

the

En

bu he

be

pre

the

the

dri

We had four very handsome horses, and the driver was very proud of his turn out. He would bowl along on a reasonable trot, on the highway, but when he entered a village he did it on a furious run, and accompanied it with a frenzy of ceaseless whip prackings that sounded like volleys of musk(try. He tore through the narrow street) and around the sharp curves like a moving earthquake, showering his volleys as he went, and before him swept a continuous ticial wave of scampering children, ducks, cats, and mothers clasping babies which they had snatched out of the way of the coming destruction; and as this living wave washed aside, along the wall, its elements, being safe, forgot their fears and turned their admiring gaze upon that gallant driver till he thundered around the next carve and was lost to sight,

He was a great man to those villagers, with his gaudy clothes and his territic ways. Whenever he stopped to have his cattle watered and fed with loaves of bread, the villiagers stood around admiring him while he swaggered about, the little boys gazed up at lus face with humble homage, and the landlord brought out foaming muge of beer and conversed proudly with him while he Then he mounted his lofty box, swung his explosive whip, and away he went again, like a storm. I had not seen anything like this before since I was a boy, and the stage used to flourish through the village with the dust flying and the horn tooting.

his looker

utes.

y interest

t horses to

nds up the

at projec's

it goes for-

it aft, and other ring

of the other

fter cross-

end back-

inderneath

and wraps

efore, and rae's head,

p the dust

s the iron

t his teeth ds of these

kling anto hold his thing on a

rs to keep a hill, and

ng which I s it aft and pulls the

hings up to ever have

t I do not

norses, and

tnrn ont.

able trot.

entered a ceaseless

volleys of

he narrow

rves like a

his volleys

a continu-

ren, ducks,

ies which

vay of the

this liv-

wall, its fears and that gal-round the villagers,

ritic ways.

his cattle

bread, the

him while

poys gazed

e, and the

, and ac-

and then top of the

When we reached the base of the Kaiserstuhl, we took two more horses; we had to toil along with difficulty for an hour and half or two hours, for the ascent was no very gradual, but when we passed the backbone and approached the station, the drive surpassed all his previous efforts in the of rush and clatter. He could not have six horses all the time, so he made the most of his chance while he had it.

Up to this point we had been in the heart of the William Tell region. The hero is not forgotten, by any means, or held in doubtful veneration. His wooden image, with his bow drawn, above the doors of taverns, was a frequent feature of the scenery.

About noon we arrived at the foot of the Brunig pass, and made a two hour stop at the village hotel, another of those clean, pretty and thoroughly well kept inn which are such an astonishment to people who are accustomed to hotels of a dismally different pattern in remote country towns. There was a lake here, in the lap of the great mountains, the green slopes that rose toward the lower crags were graced with scattered Swiss cottages neatling among miniature farms and gardens, and from out a leafy amhuscade in the upper heights tumbled a brawling oataract.

Carriage after carriage, laden with tourists and trunks, arrived, and the quiet hotel was soon populous. We were early at the table d'hote and saw the people all come in. There were twenty-five, perhaps. They were of various nationalities, but we were the only Americans. Next to me sat an English bride, and next to her sat her new husband whom she called 'Neddy,' though he was big enough and stalwart enough to be entitled to his full name. They had a pretty little lover's quarrel over what wine they should have. Neddy was for obeying the guidebook and taking the wine of the country; but the bride said,-

'What, that nasty stuff?'

'It isn't nabsty, Pet, it's quite good.'

'It is nahsty.'

'No, it isn't nahety.' 'It's oful nahsty, Neddy, and I shanh't drink it.

have? She said he knew very well that she | we should go down in never drank anything but champagne. She

'You know very well papa always has champagne on his table, and I've always been used to it.

Neddy made a playful pretence of being distressed about the expense, and this amused her so much that she nearly exhausted her-self with laughter—and this pleased him so much that he repeated his jest a couple of times, and added new and killing varieties to When the bride finally recovered, she

Neddy a love-box on the arm with her as nd said with arch severity-Well, you would have me-nothing else

ald do-ro you'll have to make the best of bargain. Do order the champagne, ful dry.

So with a mock groan which made her laugh again, Neddy ordered the champagne.

The fact that this young woman had never moistened the selvedge edge of her soul with a less plebeian tipple than champagne, had a marked and subduing effect upon Harris. He believed she belonged to the royal family. But I had my doubts.

We heard two or three different languages spoken by people at the table and guessed out the nationalities of most of the guests to our satisfaction, but we failed with an elderly gentleman and his wife and a young girl who sat opposite us, and with a gentleman of about thirty-five who sat three seats be-yond Harris. We did not hear any of these yond Harris. We did not hear any of these speak. But finally the last named gentleman left while we were not noticing, but we looked up as he reached the far end of the He stopped there a moment, and made his toilet with a pocket comb. So he was a German; or else he had lived in German hotels long enough to catch the fashion. When the elderly couple and the young girl rose to leave, they bowed respectfully to us. So, they were Germans, too. This national custom is worth six of the other one for ex-

After dinner we talked with several Englishmen, and they inflamed our desire to a hotter degree than ever, to see the sights of Meiringen from the heights of the Brunig They said the view was marvellous, and that one who had seen it once could never forget it. They also spoke of the romantic nature of the road over the pass, and how in one place it had been cut through a flank of the solid rock, in such a way that the mountain overhung the tourist as he passed by; and they furthermore said that the sharp turns in the road, and the abruptness of the descent, would Then the question was, what she must afford us a thrilling experience, for

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

STATE OF THE STATE

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503 STATE OF THE STATE

gallop and seem to be spinning around the rings of a whirlwind, like a drop of whiskey descending the spirals of a corkscrew. I got all the information out of these gentlemen that we could need; and then, to make every thing complete, I asked them if a body could get hold of a little fruit or milk here and there, in case of necessity. They threw up their hands in speechless intimation that the road was simply paved with refreshment pedlars. We were impatient to let away now, and the rest of our two hour stop rather dragged. But finally the set time arrived and we began the ascent. Indeed it was a wonderful road. It was smooth, and compact and clean, and the side next the precipices was guarded all along by dressed atone posts about three feet high, placed at short distances apart. The road could not have been built better if Napoleon the First had built it. He seems to have been the introductor of the sort of roads which Europe now unes. All literature which describes life as it existed in Eugland, France and Germany up to the close of the last century, is filled with pictures of coaches and carriages wallowing through these three countries in mud and slush half-wheel deep; but after Napoleon had floundered through a conquered kingdom he generally arranged things so that the rest of the world could fo'low dry shod.

generally arranged things so that the rest of the world could fo'low dry shod.

We went on climbing, higher and higher, and curving hither and thither, in the shade of noble woods, and with a rich variety and profusion of wild flowers all about us; and glimpses of rosy grassy back bones below us occupied by trim chalets and nibbling sheep, and other glimpses of far lower altitudes, where distance diminished the chalets to toys and obliterated the sheep altogether; and every now and then some ermined monarch of the Alps swung magnificently into view for a moment, then drifted past an intervening spur and disappeared again.

It was an intoxicating trip, altogether; the exceeding since of satisfaction that follows a good dinner added largely to the enjoyment; the having something especial to look forward to and muse about, like the approaching grandeurs of Meiringen, sharpened the sest. Smoking was never so got I before, solid comfort was never solider; we lay back against the thick cushions, silent, meditative, steeped in felicity.

I rubbed my eyes, opened them and started. I had been dreaming I was at see, and it was a thrilling surprise to wake up and find land all around me. It took me a couple of seconds to 'come to,' as you may say; then I took in the situation. The horses were drinking at a trough in the edge of a town, the driver was taking beer, Harris was snoring at my side, the courier, with folded arms and bowed head, was eleeping or the box, twe dosen barefooted and barehesded children were gathered about the carriage, with their hands crossed behind, gessing up with serious and innocent admiration at the dosing tourists baking there in the sun. Several small girls held night-capped babies nearly as big as themselves in their arms, and even these fat babies seemed to take a sort of sluggish interest in its.

h

T

tr

h

tv

gr ar pr is

at in ho

siz

it

th

fre

in

gr

fre

ve re H

ah We hi

th

fre

ju co wi

mo ve

ev it the

We had slept an hour and a half and missed all the scenery! I did not need anybody to tell me that. If I had been a girl, I could have enred for vexation. As it was, I woke up the agent and gave him a piece of my mind. Instead of being humilitated, he only upbraided me for being awanting in vigilance. He said he had expected to improve his mind by coming to Europe, but a man might travel to the ends of the earth with me and never see anything, for I was manifestly endowed with the very genius of ill luck. He even tried to get up some emotion about that poor courier, who never got a chance to see anything, on account of my heedlessness. But when I thought I had borne about enough of this kind of talk, I threatened to make Harris tramp back to the summit and make a report on that scenery, and this suggestion spiked his battery.

We drove sullenly through Briens, dead to the seductions of its bewildering array of Swiss carvings and the clamorous hochoing of its cuckoo clocks, and had not entirely recovered our spirits when we rattled across the bridge over the rushing blue river and entered the pretty town of Interlaken. It was just about sunset, and we had made the trip from Lucerne in ten hours.

CHAPTER XXXII.

We located ourselves at the Jungfran Hotel, one of those huge establishments which the needs of modern travel have created in every attractive spot on the continent. There was a great gathering at diner, and as usual one heard all sorts of languages.

The table d'hote was served by waitresses dreased in the quaint and comely continue of the Swiss pessants. This consists of a simple gros de laine, trimmed with ashes of roses, with overskirt of sacre blen ventre saint gris, cut bias on the off side, with facings of petit polonaise and narrow insertions of pete de fois gras backstitched to the mise d'esprit. It gives to the wearer a singularly piquant and alluring aspect.

Ided

the

iage,

g up

ation

there

girle

h in-

miss-

anygirl,

im a imili-

ng so d exng to

thing,

very

, who nn 80-

hen I f this Harris

report

piked

, dead

hooing

ely re

across or and in. It

de the

1.12.49

ngfran

ments

have ne conat din-

of lan-

tresses

s sim-

hes of

ventre with ow inched to

a jen

One of these waitresses, a woman of forty, had side whiskers reaching half way down her jaw. They were two fingers broad, dark in colour, pretty thick, and the hairs were an inch long. One sees many women on the continent with quite conspicuous moustaches, but this was the only woman I saw who had reached the dignity of whiskers.

After dinner the guests of both sexes distributed themselves about the front porches and the ornamental grounds belonging to the hotel, to enjoy the cool air; but as the wilight deepened toward darkness, they gathered themselves together in that addest and solemnest and most constrained of all paces, the great blank drawing-room which is a chief feature of all continental summer hotels. There they grouped themselves about, in couples and threes, and mumbled in bathed woices, and looked timid and homeless and forlorn.

There was a small piano in this room, a clattory, wheezy, asthmatic thing, certainly the very worst miscarriage in the way of a plan that the world has seen. In turn, five or six dejected and homesick ladies approached it doubtingly, gave it a single inquiring thump, and retired with the lockjaw. But the boss of that instrument was to come, nevertheless; and from my own countryfrom Arkansaw. She was a bran new bride, innocent, girlish, happy in herself and her grave and worshiping stripling of a husband; she was about eighteen, just out of school, free from affections, unconscious of that passionless multitude around ter; and the very first time she smote that old wreck one recognized that it had met his destiny, Her stripling brought an armful of aged sheet music from their room-for this bride went 'heeled,' as you might say-and bent himself lovingly over and got ready to turn the pages.

The bride fetched a swoop with her fingers from one end of the keyboard to the other, just to get her bearings, as it were, and you could see the congregation set their teeth with the agony of it. Then, without any more preliminaries, she turned on all the horrors of the 'Battle of Prague,' that venerable shivaree, and waded chin deep in the blood of the slain. She made a fair and honourable average of two false notes in every five, but her soul was in arms and she never topped to correct. The audience stood it with pretty fair grit for a while, but when the cannonade waxed hotter and hetter and fiercer, and the discord average rose to four in five, the procession began to move. A few stragglers held their ground ten minutes longer, but when the girl began to wring the true inwardness out of the ories of the wounded, they struck their colours and retired in a kind of pasie.

There never was a completer victory; I was the only non-combatant left on the field. I would not have deserted my country-woman anyhow, but indeed I had no desire in that direction. None of use like medio-crity, but we all reversure perfection. This girl's music was perfection in its way; it was the worst music that had ever been achieved on our planet by a mere human believe.

I moved up close, and never lost a strain. When she got through, I asked her to play it again. She did it with a pleased alsority and a heightened enthusiasm. She made it all discords, this time. She got an amount of anguish into the cries of the wounded that shed a light on human suffering. She was on the war path all the evening. All the time, crowds of people gathered on the porches and pressed their noses against the window to look and marvel, but the bravest never returned in. The bride went off satisfied and happy with her young fellow, when her appetite was finally gorged, and the tourists swarmed in again.

again.

What a change has Toome over Switzerland, and in fact all Europe, during this century. Seventy or eighty years ago Napoleon was the only man in Europe who could really be called a traveler; he was the only man who had devoted his attention to it and taken a powerful interest in it; he was the only man who had travelled extensively; but now everybody goes everywhere; and Switzerland, and many other regions which were unvisited and unknown remotenesses a hundred years ago, are in our days a buzzing hive of restless atrangers every summer. But I digress.

In the morning, when we looked cut of our windows, we saw a wonderful sight. Across the valley, and apparently quite neighbourly and close at hand, the giant form of the Jungfrau rose cold, and white into the clear sky, beyond a gateway in the nearer highlands. It reminded me, somehow, of one of those colossal billows which swells, auddenly up beside one's ship, at sea, sometimes, with its crest and shoulders snowy white, and the rest of its noble proportions streaked downward with creamy toam.

I took out my eketch book and made a little picture of the Jungfrau, merely to get the shape:

. I do not regard this as one of my finished works, in fact I do not rank it among my

Works, at all; it is only a study; it is hardly more then what one might call a sketch. Other artists have done me the grace to admire it, but I am severe in my judgments of my own pictures, and this one does not move ma.

It was hard to believe that that lefty wooded rampart on the left which so overtops the Jungfran was not actually the higher of the two, but it was not, of course. It is only 2,000 or 3,000 feet high, and of course has no snow upon it in summer, whereas the Jungfran is not much short of 14,000 feet high and therefore that lowest verge of snow—on her side, which seems nearly down to the valley level, is really about seven thousand feet higher up in the air than the summit of that wooded rampart. It is the distance that region the deception. The wooded height is about four or five miles removed from us, but the Jungiran is four or tive times that distance away.

Walking down the street of shops, in the foreneou, I was attracted by a large picture, carved, frame and all, from a single block of chocolate coloured wood, . There are people who know everything: Some of these had told us that continental shop-keepers always raise their prices on English and Americans. Many people had told us it was expensive to buy things through a courier, whereas I had supposed it was just the reverse. When I saw this picture I conjectured that it was worth more than the friend I proposed to buy it for would like to pay, but still it was worth while to inquire; so I told the courier to step in and ask the price as if he wanted it for himself; I told him not to speak in English, and above all not to reveal the fact that he was a courier. Then I moved on a few yards, and waited.

The courier came presently and reported the price. I said to myself, 'It is a hun-dred france too much,' and so dismissed the matter from my mind. But in the afternoon I was passing that place with Harris, and the picture attracted me again. We stepped in, to see how much higher broken German would raise the price. The shopwoman named a figure just a hundred france lower than the courier had named. This was a pleasant surprise. I said I would take it. After I had given directions as to where it was to be shipped, the shopwoman said any sai said, appealingly,-

'If you please, do not let your courier know you bought it.

This was an unexpected remark.

'What makes you think I have a cour-

Ah, that is very simple; he told me

He was very thoughtful. But tell me, -why did you charge him more than you are charging me ?

! That is very simple, also : I do not have to pay a percensege, You would have had to pay the courier a percentage.

Undoubtedly. The courier always has his percentage. In this case it would have been a hundred france.

Then the tradesman does not pay a part of it,—the purchaser pays all of it?! again and the courier agree upon a price which is twice or thrice the value of the article, then the two divide and both get a percen-

I see. But it seems to me that the purchaser does all the paying, even then.

h

81

ab

tin

im

but

oup Ano

Wei

000 bill

egu siue

hus

equ get tick

the

pao

wife

the

han

find

form

on,

bod

beer

obse

com

O, to be sure ! It goes without saying." But I have hought this picture myself; therefore why shouldn't the courier know

The woman exclaimed, in distress,-Ah, indeed it would take off all my little profit ! He would come and demand his hundred france, and I should have to pay. He has not done the buying. You could refuse.

'I could not dare to refuse. never bring travellers here again. More than that, he would denounce me to the other couriers, they would divert custom from me, and my business would be injured.

I went away in a thoughtful frame of mind. I began to see why a courier could afford to work for $55 a month and his fares. A month or two later I was able to understand why a courier did not have to pay any board or lodging, and why my hotel bills were always larger when I had him with me than when I lett him behind, somewhere for a few days.

Another thing was also explained, now, apparently. In one town I had taken the courier to the bank to do the translating when I drew some money. ' I had sat in the reading room till the transaction was finished. Then a clerk had brought the money to me in person, and had been exceedingly polite, even going so far as to precede me to the door and hold it open for me and bow me out as if I had been a distinguished personage. It was a new experience. change had been in my favour ever since I had been in Europe, but just that one time. I got simply the face of my drait, and no extra france, whereas I had expected to get quite a number of them. This was the first time I had ever used the courier at a bank. I had suspected something then, and as long as he remained with me afterward I long as he remained with me afterward I managed bank matters by my elf.

Still; if I felt that I could afford the tax, I would never stravel without a courier, for a good courier is a convenience whese value o nnot be settimated in dollars and cents. Without him, travel is a bitter harassment, a purgatory of little exasperating annoyance, a ceaseless and pities punishment, I mean to an insacible man who has no business capacity and is confissed by details.

confused by details.

Without a courier, travel hasn't a ray of pleasure in it, anywhere; but with him it is a continuous and unruffled delight. He is always at hand, never has to be sent for ; if your bell is not answered promptly,-and it seldom is,—you have only to open the door and speak, the courier will hear, and he will have the order attended to or raise an instart, and whither you are going, leave all the rest to him. You need not inquire about trains, or fares, or car changes, or hotels, or anything else. At the proper time he will put in a cab or an omnibus, and drive you to the train or the boat; he has packed your luggage and transferred it, he has paid all the bills. Other people have preceded you half an hour to soramble for impossible places and lose their tempers, but you can take your time, the courier has secured rests for you, and you can oc-oupy the: your leisure.

At the tion, the crowd mash one another to pulp in the effort to get the weigher's attention to their trunks; they dispute hotly with these tyrants, who are sool and indifferent; they get their baggage billets at last, and then have another squeeze and another rage over the disheartening business of trying to get them recorded and paid for, and still another over the equally di-heartening business of trying to get near enough to the ticket office to buy a ticket; and now with their tempers gone to the dogs, they must stand penned up and packed together, laden with wraps and satchels and shawl straps, with the weary wife and babies, in the waiting room, till the doors are thrown open—and then all hands make a grand final rush to the train, find it full, and have to stand on the platform and fret until some more cars are put on. They are in a condition to kill some-body by this time. Meantime you have been sitting in your car, smoking, and observing all this missry in the extremest

On the journey the guard is polite

and watchful, -- won't allow anybody to get into your compartment, -- tells them you are just recovering from the small pox and do not like to be disturbed. For the courier has made everything right with the guard. At way stations the courier comes to your compartment to see if you want a glass of water or a newspaper; or anything; at eating stations he sends luncheon out to you, while the other people scramble and worry in the dining-rooms. If anything breaks, about the car you are in, and a station master proposes to pack you and your agent into a compartment with strangers, the courier reveals to him confidentially that you are a French duke born dear and dumb, and the official comes and makes affable signs that he has ordered a choice car to be added to the train for you.

At custom houses the multitude file tediously through, hot and irritated, and look on while the officers burrow into the trunks and make a mess of everything; but you hand your keys to the courier and ait still. Perhaps you arrive at your destination in a rainstorm at ten at night—you generally do. The multitude spend half an hour verifying their baggage and getting it transferred to the omnibuses; but the courier puts you into a vehicle without a moment's less of time, and when you reach your hotel you find your rooms have been secured two or three days in advance, everything is ready, you can go at once to bed. Some of those other people will have to drift around to two or three hotels, in the rain, before they find accommodations.

I have not set down half of the virtues that are vested in a good courier, but I think I have set down a sufficiency of them to show that an irritable man who can afford one and does not employ him, is not a wise economist. My courier was the worst one in Europe. yet he was a good deal better than none at all. It could not pay him to be a better one than he was, because I could not afford to buy things through him. He was a good enough courier for the small amount he got out of his service. Yes, to travel with a courier is bliss, to travel without one is the reverse.

I have had dealings with some very had couriers; but I have also had dealings with one who might fairly be called perfection. He was a young Polander, named Joseph N. Verey. He spoke eight languages, and seemed to be equally at home in all of them; he was shrewd, prompt, posted, and punctual; he was fertile in resources, and singularly gifted in the matter of overcoming difficulties; he not only knew how to do everything in his line, but he knew the best

H BAYC ve had To bas

ld me

Il me n you

a bave a part desman

· which article, percen-

the pur-D. 1 saying. myself : ier know my little smand his e to pay You could

He would in. More s to the t custom uld be in-frame of rier could d his fares. to undereve to pay my hotel I had him pind, some-inad, now, taken the translating d sat in the was fluishhe money to exceedingly recede me to me and bow guished perience. Exever since [ at one time. rait, and no ected to get was the fire ways and the quickest; he was handy with children and invalids; all his employer needed to do was to take life easy and leave everything to the courier. His address is, care of Mesers. Gay & Son, Strand, London; he was formerly a conductor of Gay's tourist parties. Excellent couriers are somewhat rare; if the reader is about to travel, he will find it to his advantage to make a note of this one.

SHOULD AN CHAPTER XXXIII.

The beautiful Gicebach Fall is near Interlaken, on the other side of the lake of Briess, and is illuminated every night with those gorgeous theatrical fires whose name I cannot call just at this moment. This was aid to be a spectacle which the tourist ought by no means to miss. I was strongly tempted, but I could not go there with propriety, because one goes in a buat. The task which I had set myself was to walk over Europe on foot, not skim over it in a boat. I had made a tacit contract with myself; it was my duty to abide by it. I was wiffing to make my boat trips for pleasure, but I could not conscientiously make them in the way of business.

Is cost me something of a pang to lose that fine sight, but I lived down the desire, and gained in my self-respect through the triumph. I had a finer and a grander sight, however, where I was. That was the mighty dome of the Jungfran softly outlined against the sky and faintly silvered by the starlight. There was something subusing in the influence of that silent and solemn and awful presence; one seemed to meet the immutable, the indestructible, the eternal, face to face, and to feel the trivial and flecting nature of his own existence the more sharply by the contrast. One had the sense of being under the brooding contemplation of a spirit, not an inert mass of rocks and ice,—a spirit which had looked down, through the slow drift of the ages, upon a million vanished races of men, and judged them; and would judge a million more,—and still be there, watching, unchanged and unchangeable, after all life should be gone and the earth have become a vacant desoltion.

While I was feeling these things, I was groping, without knowing it toward an understanding of what the spell is which people find in the Alps, and in no other mountains,—that strange, deep, nameless influence, which, once felt, cannot be forgotten,—once felt, leaves always behind it a restless longing to feel it again,—a longing which is like homesickness; a grieving, haunting yearning, which will plead, implore, and persecute till it has its will. I met dosene of people, imaginative and unimaginative, oultivated and uncultivated, who had come from far countries and roamed through the Swiss Alps year after year, they could not explain why. They had come first, they said, out of idle curiosity, because everybody talked about it; they had come since because they could not help it, and they should keep on coming, while they lived, for the same reason; they had tried to break their chains and stay away, but it was futile; now, they had no desire to break them. Others came nearer formulating what they felt: they said they could find perfect rest and peace nowhere else when they were troubled; all frets and worries and chaffings sank to sleep in the presence of the beignant serenity of the Alps; the Great Spirit of the Mountain breathed his own peace upon sheir hurt minds, and sore hearts, and healed them; they could not think base thoughts or do mean and sordid things here before the visible threne of God.

en af

és.

-

th

W

to

m

of m

ta pe coo les Ge

80

on

.

do

tel

loc

wh

we

for

at I h

thi we the

dre

spe Voi

do

oui

Down the road a piece was a Kursaal,—whatever that may be,—and we joined the human tide to see what sort of enjoyment it might afford. It was the usual open-air concert, in an ornamental garden, with wines, beer, milk, whey, grapes, etc.,—the whey and the grapes being necessaries of life to certair invalids whom physicians cannot repair, and who only continue to exist by the grace of whey or grapes. One of these departed spirits told me, in a sad and lifeless way, that there was no way for him to live but by whey, never drank anything, now, but whey, and dearly, dearly loved whey, he didn't know whey he did, but he did. After making this pun he died—that is the whey it served him.

Some other remains, preserved from decomposition by the grape system, told me that the grapes were of a peculiar breed, highly medicated in their nature, and that they were counted out and administered by the grape-doctors as methodically as if they were pills. The new patient, if very feeble, began with one grape before breakfast, took three, during breakfast, a couple between meals, five at luncheon, three in the afterneon, seven at dinner, four for supper, and part of a grape just before going to bed, by way of a general regulator. The quantity was gradually and regularly increased, according to the needs and capacities of the patient, until by and by you would find him disposing of his one grape per second all the day long, and his regular barrel per day. He said that men cured in this way, and enabled to discard the grape system, never afterward got over the habit of talking as if they were dictating to a slow amanuensis, because they always made a pause between each two words while they sucked the substance out of an imaginary grape. He said these were tedious people to talk with. He said that men who had been oured by the other process were easily distinguished from the rest of mankind because they always tilted their heads back between every two words, and swallowed a swig of imaginary whey. He said it was an impressive thing to observe two men, who had been cured by the two processes, engaged in conversation—said their pauses and accompanying movements were so continuous and regular that a stranger would think himself in the presence of automatic machines. One fieds out a great many wonderful things by travelling, if he stumbles upon the right person.

mim-

who

amed ar, had

y had

, had

denire

rmulcould

in the

antein

them; or do re the

ed the

nent it

wines.

whey

life to

cannot

f thee

d and

Way

never

whey,

After

e whey

om deold me

breed,

ered by feeble.

it, took etween e after-

er, and

uantity .

ed, .ac-

of the

ind him

day.

I did not remain long at the Kursaal; the music was good enough, but it seemed rather tame after she cyclone of that Arkansaw expert. Besides, my adventurous spirit had conceived a formidable enterprise—nothing less than a trip from Interlaken, by the Gemmi and Visp, clear to Zermatt, on foot! So it was necessary to plan the details, and get ready for an early start. This courier (this was not the one I have just been speaking of), thought that the portier of the hotel would be able to tell us how to find our way. And so it turned out. He chowed us the whole thing on a relief map, and we could see our route, with its elevations and depressions, its villages and its rivers, as clearly as if we were sailing over it in a balloon. A reliefmap is a great thing. The portier also wrote down each day's journey and the nightly hotel on a piece of paper, and made our course so plain that we should hever be able to get lost without high-priced outside help.

I put the courier in the care of a gentleman who was going to Lausanne, and then we went to bed, after laying out the walking coetumes and putting them into condition for instant occupation in the morning.

However, when we came down to breakfast at 8 a.m., it looked so much like rain that I I hired a two-horse top-buggy for the first third of the journey. For two or three hours we jogged along the level road which skirts the beautiful lake of of Thun, with a dim and dreamlike picture of watery expanses and spectral Alpine forms always before us, veiled in a mellowing mist. Then a steady down-pour set in, and hid everything but the nearest of jour. We kept the rain out of our faces with umbrellas, and away from our bodies with the leather apron of the buggy; but the driver eat, umsheltered and placidly scaked the weather in and seemed to like it. We had the road all to ourselves, and I never had a pleasanter excur-

The weather began to clear while we were driving up a valley called the Kienthal, and presently a vast black cloud bank in front of us dissolved away and uncurtained the grand proportions and the scoring loftinesses of the Rumis Alp. It was a sort of breathtaking surprise; for we had not supposed there was anything behind that low-lung blanket of sable cloud but level valley. What we had been mistaking for fleeting glimpses of sky away aloft there, were really patches of the Bumis's anowy creat caught through shredded rents in the drifting pall of vapour.

We dined in the inn at Frutigen, and our driver ought to have dined there, too, but he would not have had time to dine and get drunk both, so he gave his mind to making a master-piece or the latter, and succeeded. A German gentleman and his two young lady daughters had been taking their nooning at the inn, and when they left, just ahead of us, it was plain that their driver was as drunk as ours, and as happy and good-natured, too, which was saying a good deal. These rascale overflowed with attentions and information for their guests, and with brotherly love for each other. They tied their reins, and took off their coats and hats, so that they might be able to give unencumbered attention to conversation and to the gestures necessary for its illustration.

The road was smooth; it led up and over and down a continual succession of hills : but it was narrow, the horses were used to it, and could not get out of it anyhow; so why shouldn't the drivers entertain them-selves and us? The notes of our horses projected sociably into the rear of the forward carriage, and as we toiled up the hill, our driver stood up and talked to his friend, and his friend stood up and talked back to him, with his rear to the scenery. When the top was reached and we went flying down the other side, there was no change in the programme. I carry it in my memory yet, the picture of that forward driver, on his knees on his high seat, resting his elbows on its back, and beaming down on his passengers, with happy eye, and flying hair, and jolly red face, and offering his card to his back and horses and both teams were whizzing down a long hill with nobody in a position to tell whether we were bound to destruction or an undeserved safety.

Toward aunset we entered a beautiful green valley detted with chalets, a cosy little domain hidden away from the busy would in a cloistered nook among giant precipices toped with snowy peaks that seemed to float like islands above the curling surf of the sea of vapour that severed them from the lower world. Down from vague and vaporous heights, little ruffled signag milky currents came crawling, and found their way to the verge of one of the tremendous overhanging walls, whence they plunged, a shaft of silver, shivered to atoms in mid-descent and turned to an airy puff of luminous dust. Here and there, in grooved depressions among the mowy desolations of the upper altitudes, one glimpsed the extremity of a glacier, with its-sea green and honey-combed battlements of ice.

Up the valley, under a dizzy precipice, Vanderates, our baltnestled the village of Kandersteg, our balting place for the night. We were soon there, and housed in the hotel. But the waning day had such an inviting influence that we did not remain housed many moments, but struck out and followed a rouring torrent of ice water up to its far, source in a sort of little grass carpeted par-lour, walled in all around by vast precipices, and overlooked by clustering animits of ice. This was the anuggest little croquet ground imaginable; it was perfectly level, and not more than a mile long by half a mile wide. The walls around it were so gigantic, and everything about it was on so mighty a scale that it was believed, by contrast, to what I have likened it to- a cony and carpeted parlour. It was so high above the Kandersteg valley that there was nothing between it and the snow peaks. I had never been in such intimate relations with the high altitudes before; the snow peaks had always been remote and unapproachable grandeurs, hitherto, but now we were hob-a-nob-if one may use such a seemingly irreverent expression about creations so august as these,

We could see the atreams which fed the terrent we had followed issuing from under the greenish ramparts of glaciers; but two or three of these, instead of flowing over the precipices, sank down into the rock and sprang in big jets out of holes in the midface of the walls.

The green nook which I have been describing is called the Gasternthal. The glacier streams gather and flow through it in a broad and rushing brook to a narrow cleft between lofty precipices; here the rushing brook becomes a mad torrent and goes occuring and thundering down toward Kanlersteg, lashing and thrushing its way over fifty.

and among monster bowlders, and burling chance roots and logs about like straws. There was no lack of cascades along this route. The path by the side of the torrent was so narrow that one had to look sharp, when he heard a cow bell, and hunt for a place that was wide enough to accommodate a cow and a Christian side by side, and such places were not always to be had at an instant's notice. The cows wear church bells, and that is a good idea in the cows, for where that torrent is, you couldn't hear an ordinary cow-bell any further than you could hear the ticking of a watch.

If needed exercise, so I employed my agent in setting stranded logs and dead trees agent in setting stranded logs and dead trees adrift, and I sat on a bowler and watched them go whirling and leaving head over heels down the boiling torrent. It was a wonderfully exhibitanting spectacle. When I had had exercise enough, I made the agent take some, by running a race with one of those logs. I made a trifle by betting on the log.

ex pro

yai

and

fow

poi

be tak

fact

the

bou

got

A high

whi

befo

· g

for dow

spie

belo

We !

raile

-la park with drop

ing.

Vie W

whe

we f

genu

After dinner we had a walk up and down the quiet Kandersteg valley, in the soft gleaming, with the spectacle of the dying lights of day playing about the creats and pinnacles of the still and solemn upper realm for contrast, and text for talk. There were nor sounds but the dulled complaining of the torrent and the economic tinkling of a distant bell. The spirit of the place was a sense of deep, pervading peace; one might dram his life tranquilly away there, and not miss it or mind it when it was gone.

The summer departed with the sun, and winter came with the stars. It grew to be a bitter night in that little hotel, backed up against a precipice that had no visible top to it, but we kept warm; and woke in time in the morning to find that everybody else had left for the Gemmi three hours before—so our little plan of helping that German family (principally the old man), over the Pass, was a blocked generosity.

We hired the only guide left, to lead us on our way. He was ever seventy, but he could have given me mine-tenths of his atrength and still had all his age entitled him to. He shouldered our satchels, overcosts, and alpen-stocks, and we set out up the steep path. It was not work. The old man over begged us to hand over our coats and waistocats to him to carry, too, and we did it; one could not refuse so little a thing to a poor old man like that; he should have had them if he had been a hundred and

When we began that ascent, we could see a microscopic chalet perched away up against heaven on what ascened to be the highest mountain near us. It was on our right, across the narrow head of the valley. But when we got up abreast it on its own level, mountains were towering high above en every hand, and we saw that its altitude was just about that of the little Gasternthal which we had visited the evening before. Still it we had visited "the evening before." Still it seemed a long way up in the air, in that waste and lonely wilderness of rocks. It had an unteneed gram-plot in front of it which "seemed about as big as a billiard table, and this grass plot slanted so sharply downwards, and was so brief, and ended so downwards, she was so brief, and cause as exceedingly soon at the verge of the absolute precipice, that it was a shuddery thing to think of a person's venturing to trust his foot on an incline so situated at all. Supfoot on an incline so situated at all. Suppose a man stepped on an orange peel in that yard, there would be nothing for him to seize; nothing could keep him from rolling five revolutions would bring him to the edge, and over he would go. What a frightful distance he would fall!—for there are very few birds that fly as high as his starting point. He would strike and bounce, two or three times, on his way down, but this would be no advantage to him. I would as soon take an airing on the slant of a rainbow as in such a front yard, I would rather, in fact, fer the distance down would be about the same, and it is pleasanter to slide than to the same, and it is pleasanter to slide than to bounce. I could not see how the peasants got up to that chalet—the region seemed too steep for anything but a balloon.

As we strolled on climbing up higher and higher, we were continually bringing neighbouring peaks into vieward lofty prominences which had been hidden behind lower peaks before; so by and by, while standing before a group of these giants, we looked around for the chalet, again; there it was, away down below us, apparently on an incon-spicuous ridge in the valley! It was as far below us, now, as it had been above us when we were beginning the ascent.

After a while the path led us along a railed precipice, and we looked over far beneath us was the anug parlour again, the little Gasternthal, with its water jets apouting from the face of its rook walls. We could have dropped a stone into it. We had been finding the top of the world all along and always finding a still higher top stealing into view in a disappointing way just ahead: when we looked down into the Gasternthal we felt pretty sure that we had reached the genuine top at last, but it was not so; there were much higher altitudes to be scaled yet.

We were still in the pleasant shade of forest tyees, we were still in a region which was cushioned with beautiful mosses and aglow with the many-tinted Justre of innumerable wild flowers.

We found, indeed, more interest in the wild flowers than in anything else. We wild flowers than in anything else. We gathered a specimen or two of every kind which we were unacquainted with; so we had campenous bouquets. But one of the chief interests lay in chasing the seasons of the year up the mountain, and determining them by the presence of flowers and betries which we were acquainted with. For in-stance, it was the end of August at the level of the sea; in the Kandersteg valley at the base of the Pass, we found flowers which would not be due at the sea level for two or three weeks; higher up, we entered October, and gathered fringed gentians. I made no notes, and have forgotten the de-tails, but the construction of the floral colondar was very entertaining while it calendar was lasted.

In the high regions we found rich stora of the splandid red flower called the Alpine rose, but we did not find any examples, of the ugly Swiss favourite called Edelweiss. Its name seems to indicate that it is a noble flower and that it is white. It may be implied flower and that it is white.

the ugly Swiss favourite called Edelweise. Its name seems to indicate that it is a noble flower and that it is not attractive, and that not white. It may be made enough, but it is not attractive, and that not white. The fussy blossom is the content of bad cigar ashes, and appears to be smalle of a chear quality of grey plush. It is not a chear quality of grey plush, it is appears to be smalle of a chear quality of grey plush. It is not an oble and distant way of confining inself, so the high altitudes, but that is probably on account of its looks, it appearantly has no monopoly of those upper altitudes, now property, for they are sometimes introded, most by some of the loveliest of the value that is probably now wild flowers. Everybody in the Appearant of the loveliest of the value that have been antive a pet, and also the tagrith a credit all the morning, as we contain a loveliest of the lovelies of the loveliest of the loveliest of the loveliest of the loveli

154 119ma. theelf of 4 41.1 763 y but he of his entitled els, overt out up The old oar coats o, and we le a thing ould have dred and rling

raWS. g this harp.

for a odi.te

an inrs, for ear an a you

d my atched

d over

one of ting on

the soft e dying er realm ore were of a dis-S DODAG ream his niss it or

sup, and ow to be le top to

time in else had afore—so in family

Page, Was

us along the narrow path,—the one procession going, the other coming. We had taken a good deal of trouble to teach ourselves the kindly German onstom of saluting all strangers with doffed hat, and we resolutely clung to it, that morning, although it kept us have headed most of the time and was not always responded to. Still we found an interest in the thing, because we naturally liked to know who were English and Americans among the passers-by. All continental natives responded, of course; so did some of the English and Americans, but as a general thing these two races gave no sign. Whenever a man or a woman showed us cold neglect, we spoke up confidently in our own tongue and asked for such information as we happened to need, and we always got a reply in the same language. The English and American folk are not less kindly than other races, they are only more reserved, and that comes of habit and education. In one dreary, rocky waste, away above the line of vegetation, we met a procession of twenty-five mounted young men, all from America. We got answering hows enough from these, of course, for they were of an age to learn to do in Rome as Rome does, without nuch effort. At one extremity of this patch of desolution, overhung by bare and forbidding crags which husbanded drifts of everlasting anow in their chadd cavities, was a small stretch of this patch of a man and

At one extremity of this patch of desolation, overhung by bare and forbidding crags which husbanded drifts of everlasting anow in their shaded savities, was a small stretch of thin and discouraged grass, and a man and a family of pigs were soundly living here in some shanties. Consequently this place could be really reckened as 'property;' it had a money value, and was doubtless taxed. I think it must have marked the limit of real estate in this world. It would be hard to set a money value upon any piece of earth that lies between that spot and the empty realm of space. That man may claim the distinction of owning the end of the world, for if there is any definite end to the world he has certainly found it.

From here forward we moved through a storm-swept and smileless desolation. All about us rose gigantic masses, orage, and ramparts of bare and dreary rock, with not a vestige or semblance of plant or tree or flower anywhere, or glimpse of any creature that had life. The frost and the tempests of unaumbered ages had battered and hacked at these cliffs with a deathless energy, destroying them piecemeal; so all the region about their bases was a tumbled chaos of great fragments which had been split off and hurled to the ground. Soiled and aged banks of snow lay close about our path. The ghastly desolation of the place was as tremendously complete as if Dore had furnished the working plans fer it. But every now and then through the stern gateways around us we caught a view of some neighbouring majestic dome, sheethed with glittering ice, and displaying its white purity at an elevation to which ours was groveling and plebelau, and this spectacle always chained one's interest and admiration at once, and made him forget there was anything ugly in the world.

I have just said there was nothing but death and desolation in these hideous places, but I forgot. In the most forlors and arid and dismal one of all, where the racked and splintered debris was thickest, where the ancient patches of snow lay against the very path, where winds blew bitterest and the general aspect was mournfulest and dreariest, and furtherest from any suggestion of cheer or hope, I found a solitary, wes forget-me-not flourishing away, not a droop about it asy-where, but helding its bright blue star up with the prettiest and gallantest air in the world, the only happy spirit, the only smiling thing, in all that griefy desert. She assemed to say, 'Cheer up i—as long as we are here, let us make the best of it.' I judged she had earned a right to a more hospitable place; so I plucked her up and sent her, to America to a friend who would respect her for the fight she had made, all by her small self, to make a whole vast despondant Alpine desolation stop breaking its heart over the unalterable, and hold up its head and look at the bright side of things for once.

We stopped for a nooning at a strongly built little inn called the Schwarenbach. It sits in a lonely spot among the peaks, where it is swept by the trailing fringes of the cloud-rack, and is rained on, snowed on, and peter and persecuted by the storms, nearly every day of its life. It was the only habitation in the whole Gemmi Pass,

Close at hand, now, was a chance for a blood-curdling Alpine adventure. Close at hand was the anowy mass of the Great Altels ceoling its top-knot in the sky and daring us to an ascent. I was fired with the idea, and immediately made up my mind to procure the necessary guides, ropes, etc., and indertake it. I instructed Harris to go to the landlord of the inn, and set him about our preparations. Meantime I went diligently to work to read up and find out what this much-talked of mountain-climbing was like, and how one should go about it—for in these matters I was ignorant. I opened Mr. Hischliff "Summer Months among the Alps," (published 1857.) and selected his account of his ascent of Monte Rosa. It began—

'It is very difficult to free the mind from the flat for about a bout a bo

OX

101

.

the tan see var a fa the stu-

No

long long glace gl

of ti

Rosits delivered foot

they up a ing they from excitement on the evening before a grand ex-that the adventurer must get up at two in the morning—came as near as anything to flatting it all out again. However, I rein-forced, and read on about how Mr. Hipch-liff dressed by candle-light and was soon down among the guides, who were buetling about in the passage, packing provisions, and making every preparation for the start; and how he glanced out into the cold, clear

ht and saw that-

The whole sky was blasing with sters, larger and brighter than they appear through the dease atmosphere breathed by inhabi-tants of the lower parts of the earth. They seemed actually suspended from the dark vault of heaven, and their gentle light shed a fairy-like gleam over the snow-fields around the foot of 'the Matterhorn which, raised its the heart of the Great Bear, and crowning to the heart of the Great Bear, and crowning teelf with a diadem of his magnificent stars. Not a sound disturbed the deep tranquility of the night, except the distant roar of streams which rush from the high plateau of the St. Theodule glacier, and fall headlong over precipitous rocks till they lose themselves in the mases of the Gorner

He took his hot toast and coffee, and then about half-past three his caravan of ten men tiled away from the Riffel Hotel, and began the steep climb. At half-past five he hap-pened to turn around, and beheld the glo-rions spectacle of the Matterhorn, just touched by the rosy-fingered morning, and looking like a huge pyramid of fire rising out of the barren ocean of ice and rock and around it. Then the Breithorn and the Dent Blanche caught the radiant glow; but the intervening mass of Monte Rosa made it necessary for us to climb many hours before we could hope to see the sun himself, yet the whole air soon grew warmer after the splendid birth of day. He gazed at the lofty crown of Monte Rosa and the wastes of snew that guarded its steep approaches, and the chief guide delivered the opinion that no man could conquer their awful heights and put his foot upon that summit. But the adventurers moved steadily on nethertheless. it.' Then the Breithorn and the Dent Blanche moved steadily on, nethertheless.

They toiled up, and up, and still up; they passed the Grand Plateau; them toiled up a steep shoulder of the mountains, alinging like flice to its ragged face; and now they were confronted by a tremendous wall from which great blocks of ice and snow were evidently in the habit of falling. They turned aside to skirt this wall, and gradually ascended until their way was barred by a mase of gigantic anow erevices, and they turned aside again, and began a long climb of sufficient exergences to make a signing control metasary. Note that the state of the

"Fatigue compelled them to halt frequent-ly, for a moment or two." At one or these halts somebody called out, 'Look at Mont Blane I' and we were at once made aware of the very great height we had attained by actually seeing the monarch of the Alps and his attendant satellites right over the top of the Brethorn, "itself" at least 14,000 feet high It die

These people moved in single file, and were all sted to a strong rope, at regular distances spart, so that if one of them slipped, on those glddy heights, the others could brace themselves on their alpenstocks and save him from darting "into the valley, thousands of feet below." By and by they came to an ice-conted ridge which was tilted up at a sharp angle, and had a precipice on one side of it. They had to climb this, so the guide in the lead cut steps in the ice with his hatchet, and as fast as he took his toes out of one of these slight holes, the toes of the man behind him occupied it.

(Slowly and steadily we kept on our way over this dangerous part of the ascent, and I directly it was forwants for some of ne that attention was distracted from the head by the paramount necessity of looking after the feet; for, while on the left, the incline of ice was so steep that it would be imposaible for any man to save himself in case of a slip, unless the other could hold him up: on the right we might drop a pebble from the hand over precipios of baknown extent down upon the tremendous glacier below.

'Great caution, therefore, was 'absolutely necessary, and in this exposed cituation we were attacked by all the fury of that grand enemy of aspirants to Monte Ross - a severe and bitterly cold wind from the north. The fine powdery snow was driven past us in clouds, penetrating the interstices of our clothes, and the pieces of ice which flew from the blows of Peter's are were whisked into the air, and then dashed over the precipice. We had quite enough to do to prevent ourselves from being served in the same ruthless fashion, and now and then, in the more violent gusts of wind, were glad to stick our alpenstocks into the ice and hold on

Having surmounted this perilous steep, they sat down and took a brief rest with their backs against a sheltering rock and

o mird from majestic tion to dan, and

interest im forget

us places and arid

cked and re the AD-

the very

and the

dreariest,

of cheer ret-me-not blue star

tost air in desert.

of it. I

more hosp and sent

o would re-

ade, all by

st desponding its heart its head things for t a strongly

onbeon. It

inges of the

wed on, and only habita-

chauce for a Close at Great Altela nd daring as to procure and underto go to the diligently to nbing was

I opened Mr. among the coted his ac-te Rosa. It

d. hing but their heels dangling over a bottomless abyes; then they alimbed to the base of another ridge a more difficult and dangerous one still:

The whole of the ridge was exceedingly narrow, and the fall an each side desperately steep, but the ice in some of these internals between the masses of rock assumed the form of a mere sharp ndge, almost like a knife; these places, though met more than three or four short passes in length, looked annonmonly awkward; but, like the sword leading true believers to the gates of Paradise, they must needs be passed before we could attain to the annumit of our ambition. These were in one or two places so marrow, These were in one or two: places so marrow, that in stepping over them with toes well turned ont, for greater security, one end of the foot projected, over the awful precipios on the right; while the other was on the beginning of the loy alone on the left, which was scarpely less steep; than the recks. On these occasions Pater; would take my head, and soch of us stretching as far as we could, he was thus, analled to get a firm (coting) he was thus enabled to get a firm footing two paces or rather more from me, whence a spring would probably bring him to the rock on the other side; then, turning round, he called on me to come, and taking a couple of steps carefully, I was met at the third by his ontetratched hand ready to clasp my mine, and in a moment stood by his side. The others followed in much the his side. The others followed in much the same fashion. Once my right feet slipped on the side towards the sprecipice, but I threw out my left arm in a moment so that it caught the joy edge ander my armpit as I fell, and supported me considerably; at the same instant I cast my eyes down the side on which I had alipped, and contrived to plant my right foot on a piece of rock as large as a cricket ball, which chanced to protrude through the ice, on the very edge of the pre-cipice. Being thus, anchored, fore and aft, as it were, I believe I could easily have recovered myself, even if I had been alone, though it must be confessed the situation would have been an awful one; as it was, however, a jerk from Peter settled the matter very soon, and I was on my legs all right in an instant, The rope is an immense help in places of this kind."

Now they arrived at the base of a great knob or dome veneered with ice and powdered with snow—the utmost summit, the last bit of solidity between them and the hollow vault of heaven. They set to work with their hatchets, and were soon creeping, insect-like, up its surface, with their heels projecting over the thinnest kind of nethingness, thickened up a little with a few wandering shreds and films of cloud moving in hay procession far below. Presently one man's too-hold broke and he fell! There he dangled in mid-sir at the end of the rope, like's spider, till his friends above hauled his internal relate and

him into place again.

A little bit later, the party stood upon the wee pedestal of the very summit, in a driving wind, and looked out upon the vast green expanses of Italy and a shereless ocean of billowy Alps.

When I had reached thus far, Harris burst into the room in a noble excitement and said the ropes and the guides were secured, and saked if I was ready. I said I believed I wouldn't ascend the Altels this time. I said wouldn't ascend the Altels this time. Alp-climbing was a different thing from what I had supposed it was, and so I judged we had better study its points a little more before we went definitely into it. But I told from we went demnitely into it. But I told him to retain the guides and order them to follow us to Zermatt, because I meant to use them there. I said I could feel the spirit of adventure beginning to stir in me, and was sure that the fell fascination of Alp-climbing would soon be upon me. I said he could make up his mind to it that we would do a lead the four deed before we were a week older which would make the hair of the timid curl with fright.

This made Harris happy, and filled him with ambitious anticipations. He went at once to tell the guides to follow us to Zermatt and bring all their paraphernalis with them.

CHAPTER XXXV.

A great and priceless thing is a new in-terest! How it takes possession of a man! how it clings to him, how it rides him! I strode onward from the Schwarenbach hostelry a changed man, a reorganized personal-ity. I walked in a new world, I saw with new eyes. I had been looking aloft at the giant snow peaks only as things to be wor-shipped for their grandeur and magnitude, and their unspeakable grace of form; I looked up at them now, as also things to be con-quered and climbed. My sense of their grandeur and their noble beauty was neither lost nor impaired; I had gained a new in-terest in the mountains without losing the old ones. I followed the steep lines up, inch by inch, with my eye, and noted the possi-bility or impossibility of following them with my feet. When I saw a shining helmet of ice projecting above the clouds, I tried to imagine I saw files of black specks toiling up

We skirted the lonely little lake called the Daubensee, and presently passed close by a glacier on the right—a thing like a great river frozen solid in its flow and brok I ha H and etone to he beer but! jewe W tion.

jump into i pret charn gigan over rose ' Mont was ! oblite towne glass.

Rig out of bench this g and w OVerwell u A BAW to it. We remar in co coloss alway perpe met a porter up th Was D a tole side, w and fl prefer have l mule ence,apeote outsid carryi rest a usted paths,

ently one There he the rope,

a a driving vast green a coesa of farrie buret bias bas to believed I me. 1 said judged we But I told ler them to cant to use he spirit of o, and was lp-climbing lder which d ourl with

i filled him He went at to Zermatt with them.

same of the

s a new inn of a man ! les him l I enbach hosed personal-I saw with aloft at the to be wormagnitude, m; I looke of their was neither a new inlosing the d the possines up, inch wing them ning helmet s, I tried to s toiling up thread. lake called passed close hing like a flow and broken square off like a wall at its mouth. I had never been so near a glacier before.

Here we came upon a new board abanty, and found some men engaged in building a stone house; so the Schwarenbach was soon to have a rival. We bought a bottle or so of beer here; at any rate they called it beer, but I knew by the price that it was dissolved jewellery, and I perceived by the taste that dissolved jewellery is not good stuff to drink.

We were surrounded by a hideous desolation. We stepped forward to a sort of jumping off place, and were confronted by a startling contrast: we seemed to look down into fairyland. Two or three thousand feet below us was a bright green level, with a pretty town in its midst, and a silvery stream winding among the meadows; the charming spot was walled in on all sides by gigantic precipiose clothed with pines; and over the pines, out of the softened distances, more the snowy domes and peaks of the Monte Ross region. How exquisitely green and beautiful that little valley down there was 1 The distance was not great enough to obliterate details, it only made them little, and mellow, and dainty, like landscapes and towns seen through the wrong end of a spy-

Right under us a narrow ledge rose up out of the 'valley,' with 'a green, slating, bench-shaped top, and grouped about upon this green-baise bench 'were a lot of black and white sheep which looked merely like over-sized worms. The bench seemed lifted well up into our neighbourhood, but that was a deception, it was a long way down

We began our descent, now, by the most remarkable road I have ever seen. It wound in corkscrew curves down the face of the colossal precipice,—a narrow way, with always the solid rock wall at one elbow, and perpendicular nothingness at the other. We met an everlasting procession of guides, porters, mules, litters, and tourists climbing up this steep and muddy path, and there was no room to spare when you had to pass a tolerable fat mule. I always took the inside, when I heard or saw the mule coming, and flattened myself against the wall. I preferred the inside, of course, but I should have had to take it anyhow, because the mule prefers the outside. A mule's preference,—on a precipice—is a thing to be respected. Well, his choice is always the outside. His life is mostly devoted to carrying bulky panniers and packages which rest against his body,—therefore he is habit-uated to taking the outside edge of mountain paths, to keep his bundles from rubbing he goes into the passenger but ness he absurdly clings to his old habit, and keeps one leg of his passenger always dangling over the great deeps of the lower world while that passenger's heart is in the highlands, so to speak. More than once I saw a mule's hind foot cave over the outer edge and send earth and rubbish into the bottomless abyse; and I noticed that upon these occasions the rider, whether male or female, looked tolerably upwall.

my clothes.

ably unwell.

There was one place where an 18-inch breadth of light masonry had been added to the verge of the path, and as there was a very sharp turn, here, a panel of fencing had been set up there at some ancient time. as a protection. This panel was old and gray and feeble, and the light mesonry had been loosened by recent rains. A young American girl came along on a mule, and in making the turn the mule's hind foot caved all the loose masonry and one of the fence posts over board; the mule gave a violent lurch inboard to save himself, and succeeded in the effort, but that girl turned as white as the snows of Mont Blanc for a moment,

The path here was simply a groove out into the face of the precipies; there was a feur-foot breadth of solid rock was der the traveller, am a four-foot breadth of solid rock just above his head, like the roof of a narrow porch; he could look out from this gallery and see a sheer summetless and bottomless wall of rock before him, across a gorge or crack & biscuit's toss in width, -but he could not see the bottom of his own precipios unless he lay down and projected his nose over the edgel I did not do this for I did not wish to soil

Every few hundred yards, at particularly bad places, one came across a panel or so of plank fenoing; but they were always old and weak, and they generally leaned out over the chasm and did not make any rash promises to hold up people who might need support. There was one of these panels which had only its upper board left; a pedes-trianizing English youth came tearing down the path, was seized with an impulse to look over the precipice, and without an instant's thought he threw his weight upon that crasy board. It bent outward a foot ! I never made a gasp before that came so near suffocating me. The English youth's face simply showed a lively surprise, but nothing more He went swinging along valleywards sgain, as if he did not know he had just swindled a coroner by the closest kind of a shave,

The Alpine litter is sometimes like a against rocks or banks on the other. When cushioned box made fast between the middled of two long poles, and sometimes it is a chair with a back to it and a support for the feet. It is carried by relays of extong porters. The motion is essier than that of any other conveyance. We met a few men and a great many ladies in litera; it seemed to me that most of the ladies looked pale and nauseated; their general aspect gave me the idea that they were patiently enduring a horrible suffering. As a rule, they looked at their laps, and left the scenery to take care of itself.

But the most frightened creature I saw was a led horse that overtook us. Poor felwas a led horse that overtook us. Poor fel-luw, he had been born and reared in the gransy levels of the Kandersteg valley and had never seen anything like this hideous place before. Every few steps he would stop short, glance wildly out from the dizzy height, and then spread his red nostrils wide and pant as violently as it he had been running a race; and all the while he quaked from head to heel as with a palsy. He was a handsome fellow, and he made a fine statuesque picture of terror, but it was pitiful to see him suffer so.

This dreadful path has had its tragedy. Baedeker, with his customary over terseness begins and ends the tale thus;

The descent on horseback should be avoided. In 1861 a Comtesse d' Herlincours fell from her saddle over the precipice and was killed on the spot

We looked over the precipice there, and event. It stands in the bottom of the gorge, in a place which has been hollowed out of the rock to protect it from the torrent and the storms. Our old guide never spoke but when spoken to, and then limited himself to a syllable or two; but when we saked him about this tragedy he'showed a strong interest in the matter. He said the Countess was very pretty, and very young—hardly out of her girlhood, in fact. She was newly married, and was on her bridal teur.\ The young husband was riding a little in advance; one guide was leading the husband's horse, another was leading the bride's. The cld man con-

The guide that was leading the husband's horse happened to glance back, and there was that poor young thing sitting up staring out over the precipice; and her face began to bend downward a little, and she put up her two hands slowly and met it, -- so, -- and put them flat against her eyer, -so, -and then she sunk ont of the saddle, with a sharp shrick, and one caught onlythe flash of a dress, and it was all over.

yes, he raw them all. He saw them all, just as I have told you.

done and what happened and what was said after the sorrowful occurrence, and a painful story it was.

When we had wound down toward the yalley until we were about on the last spiral of the oorksorew, Harris's hat blew over the last remaining bit of precipics,—s amall cliff a hundred or a hundred and fifty feet high,—and sailed down towards a steep slant composed of rough chips and fragments which the weather had flaked away from the precipioss. We want lesipusely down there precipices. We went lesiurely down there, expecting to find it without any trouble, but we had made a mistake, as to that. We hunted during a couple of hours,—not because the old straw hat was valuable, but out of curiosity to find out how such a thing colud manage to conceal itself in open ground where there was nothing for it to hide be-hind. When one is reading in bed, and lays his paper-mife down, he cannot find it again if it is smaller than a sabre; that hat was as stubborn as any paper knife could have been, and we finally had to give it up; but we found a fragment that had once belonged to an opera glass, and by digging around and turning over the rocks we gradually collected all the lenses and the cylinders and the various odds and ends that go to make up a complete opera glass. We afterwards had the thing reconstructed, and the owner can have his adventurous longlost property by submitting proofs and pay-We had hopes ing costs of rehabilitation. of finding the owner there, distributed around amongst the rosks, for it would have made an elegant paragraph; but we were disappointed. Still, we ware far from being disheartened, for there was a considerable area which we had not thoroughly searched; we were satisfied he was there, somewhere, so we resolved to wait over a day at Leuk and come back and get him. Then we sat down to polish off the perspiration and arrange about what we would do with him when we got him. " Harris was for contributing him to the British Museum; but I was for mailing him to his widow. That is the difference between Harris and me: harp shriek, and one caught onlythe flash a dress, and it was all over.'

Then after a pause,— Ah yes, that guide saw these things,— and against mine, I argued in favour of

T

to

the will be the state of a tilist Poits sti with mE them all,

y God, that

t of the old he had forat what was hat was said

nd a painful toward the ne last spiral lew over the e,—a small and fifty feet rds a steep ad fragments vay from the down there, trouble, but re,-not bealuable, but such a thing open ground t to hide beped, and lays anot find it re; that hat knife could o give it up; had once beby digging

e rooks we ses and the ind ends that glass. We structed, and turous longofs and payo had hopes distributed t would have but we were er from being considerable aly searched; somewhere, day at Leuk Then we sat piration and do with him was for con-Inseum; but ridow. That rris and me: or the simple oney by it. proposition in favour of mine and against his. The discussion warmed into a dispute; the dispute warmed into a quarrel. I finally said, very

My mind is made up. He goes to the Harris answered sharply,-

And my mind is made up. He goes to the Museum.

I said, calmly,—
The Museum may whistle when it gets

Harris retorted,

The widow may save herself the trouble of whistling, for I will see that she never gets him.

After some angry bandying of epithets, I

'It seems to me that you are taking on a good many airs about these remains. I don't quite see what you've got to say about them !

I? I've got all to say about them.
They'd never have been thought of if I hadn't found their opera glass. The corpse belongs to me, and I'll do as I please with

I was leader of the expedition, and all discoveries achieved by it naturally belonged to me. I was entitled to these remains, and could have enforced my right; but rather than have bad blood about the matter, I said we would toss up for them. I threw heads and won, but it was a barren victory, for although we spent all the next day searching, we never found a bone. I cannot imagine what could ever have become of that fellow.

The town in the valley is called Leuk or Lenkerbad, we pointed our course toward it, down a verdant slope which was adorned with fringed gentians and other flowers, and presently entered the narrow alleys of the outskirts and waded toward the middle of the town through liquid 'fertilizer.' They ought to either pave that village or organize a ferry

Harris's body was simply a chamois-pasture; his person was populous with the little hungry pests; his skin, when he stripped, was splotched like a scarlet fever patient's; so, when we were about to enter one of the Leukerbad inus, and he noticed its augn, 'Chamois Hotel,' he refused to stop there. He said the chamois was plentiful enough, without hunting up hotels where they made a specialty of it. I was where they made a specialty of it. I was indifferent, for the chamois is a creature that will neither bite me nor abide with me: but to calm Harris, we went to the Hotel des Alpes.

At the table d'hote we had this for an incident. A very grave man—in fact his gravity amounted to solemnity, and almost to austerity—ast opposite us and he was tight,' but doing his best to appear sober. He took up a corked bottle of wine, tilted: it over his glass a while, then set it out of the way, with a contented look, and went on with his dinner.

Presently he put his glass to his mouth, and of course found it empty. He looked puzzled, and glanced furtively and suspiciously out of the corner of his eye at a benignant and unconscious old lady who sat at his right. Shook his head, as much as to say, 'No, she couldn't have done it.'
He tilted the corked bottle over his glass again, meantime searching round with his watery eye to see if anybody was watching him. He ate a few mouthfuls, raised his glass to his lips, and of course it was still empty. He bent an injured and accusing side gaze upon that unconscious old lady, which was a study to see. She went on eating and gave no sign. He took up his glass and his bottle, with a wise private nod of his head, and set them gravely on the left hard side of his plate—poured himself ano-ther imaginary drink—went to work with his knife and fork once more—presently lifted his glass with good confidence, and found it empty, as usual.

This was almost a petrifying surprise. He straightened himself up in his chair and deliberately and sorrowfully inspected the busy old ladies at his elbows, first one and then the other. At last he softly pushed his plate away, set his glass directly in front of him, held on to it with his left hand, and proceeded to pour with his right. This time he observed that nothing came. He turned the bottle clear upside down; still nothing issued from it; a plaintive look came into his face, and he said, as if to himself, 'io! They've got it all!' Then he set the bottle down, resignedly, and took the rest of his dinner dry.

It was at that table d'hote, too. that I had under inspection the largest lady I have ever seen in private She was over seven feet high, and magnificently proportioned. What had first called my attention to her, was my stepping on an outlying flange of her foot, and hearing, from up toward the ceiling, a deep Pardon, m'eieu, but you encroach l

That was when we were coming through the hall, and the place was dim, and I could see her only vaguely. The thing which called my attention to her the second time, was, that at a table beyond ours were two very pretty girls, and this great lady came in and sat down between them and me and blotted out the view. She had a hand-ome face, and she was very finely formed-perfeerly formed, I should say a But she made everybody around her look trivial and comlace, www.Ladies w near wher .. looked like children, and the men about her looked mean. They looked like failures; and they, looked as if they felt so, too. She sat with her back to us: "I never saw such a back in my life. I would have so liked to see the on rise over it, ... The whole congregation walted, under one pretext or another, till she finished her dinner and went out; they wanted to see her at her full altitude, and they found it worth tarrying for. She filled one's idea of what an empress ought to be, when she rose up in her unapproachable grandeur and moved superbly out of that place. .... Ar

We were not at Leuk in time to see her at her heaviest weight. She had suffered from corpulence and had come there to get rid of her extra flesh in the baths. Five weeks of soaking—five uninterrupted hours of it every day—had accomplished her purpose and reduced her to the right proportions.

Those baths remove fat, and also skindiseases. The patients remain in the great tanks hours at a time. A dozen gentlemen and ladies occupy a tank together, and amuse themselves with rompings and various games. They have floating deaks and tables, and they read or lunch or play chess in water that is breast deep. The tourist can step in and view this novel spectacle if he chooses. There's a poor-box, and he will have to contribute. There are several of these big bathing houses, and you can always tell when you are near one of them by the romping noises and shouts of laughter that proceed from it. The water is running water, and changes all the time, else a patient with a ringworm might take the bath with only a partial success, since while he was ridding himself of his ring worm, he might catch the itch.

The next morning we wandered back up the green valley, leisurely, with the curving walls of those bare and stupendous precipices rising into the clouds before us. I had never seen a clean bare precipice stretching up five thousand feet above me before, and I shall never expect to see another one. They exist, perhaps, but not in piaces where one can easily get close to them. This pile of stone is peculiar. From its base to the soaring tops of its mighty towers, all its lines and all its details vaguely suggest human architecture. There are rudimentary bow windows, cornices, chimneys, demarcations of stories, etc. One could sit and stare up there and study the features and exquisite graces of this grand structure, bit by bit, and day after day, and never weary his interest. The termination, toward the town, observed in profile, is the perfection of chaps. It comes down out of the clouds in a succession of rounded, colossal, terrace-like projection—a stairway for the gods; at its head spring several lofty storm-scarred towers, one above another, with faint films of vapour curling always about them like spectral banners. If there were a king whose realms included the whole world, here would be the palace meet and proper for such a monarch. He would only need to hollow it out and put in the election light. He could give audience to a nation at a time under its roof.

Nate

of

ba

00 8 W

Tife

th

th

th ca ric

sh

an be

sh

to

tai

hi

801

W

ot.

tal the

on

800 bu

Our search for those remains having failed we inspected with a glass the dim and distant track of an old time avalanche that once swept down from some, pine grown summits behind the town and swept away the houses and buried the people; then we struck down the road that leads toward the Rhone, to see the road that leads toward the minne, the famous Ladders. These perilous things are built against the perpendicular face of a hundred feet high. The pessants of both sexes were climbing up and down them, with heavy loads on their backs. to the scent, with the second put the thrill and horror of it in my book, and he accomplished the feat successfully, through a sub-agent for three francs, which I paid. It makes me shudder yet when I think of what I felt when I was olinging there between heaven and earth in the person of that proxy. At times the world swam around me, and I could hardly keep from letting go, so dizzying was the appaling danger. Many a person would have given up and descended, but I stuck to my task. and would not yield until I had accomplished it. I felt a just pride in my exploit, but I would not have repeated it for the wealth of the world. I shall break my neck yet with such fool-hardy performances, for warnings never seem to have any lasting effect upon me. When the people of the hotel found that I had been climbing those crazy Ladders, it made me an object of considerable distinction,

Next morning, early, we drove to the Rhone valley and took the train for Viep. There we shouldered our knapsacks and things, and set out on foot, in a tremendous rain, up the winding gorge toward Zermatt. Hour after hour we sloped along by the roaring torrent, and under noble Lesser Alps which were clothed in rich velvety green all the way up and had little atomy Swiss homes perched upon grassy benches along their mist-dimmed heights.

The rain continued to pour and the torrest to boom, and we continued to enjoy both.

nination, le, is the wn out of anded, corway for bral lofty another, g always If there, the whole meet and ould only be election nation at ng failed d distant hat once summits he houses ick down ne, to see us things face of a h. g up and eir backs. cent. so I t successee francs. dder yet was cling. th in the the world rdly keep e appaling ave given my task. omplished loit, out I wealth of yet with warnings fect upon tel found

e to the for Vi-p. acke and emendous Zermatt. the roarser Alps y green all my Swisshes along Ladders,

he torrest pjoy both. At the one spot where this torrent tossed its white mane highest, and thundered loudest, and lashed the big boulders fierest, the canton had done itself the honour to build the filmsiest weeden bridge that exists in the world. While we were walking over it, along with a party of horsemen, I noticed that even the larger rain-drops made it shake. It called flarris's attention to it, and he noticed it, too. It seemed to me that if I owned an elephant that was a keepsake, and I thought a good deal of him, I would think twice before I would ride him over that

We climbed up to the village of St. Nicholas, about half past four in the afternoon, waded ankle deep through the fertilizer-juice, and stopped at a new and nico hotel close by the little church. We stripped and went to bed, and sent our clothes down to be baked. All the horde of soaked tourists did the same. That chaos of clothing got mixed in the kitcheu, and there were consequences, I did not get back the same drawers I sent down, when our things came up at 6:15; I got a pair on a new plan. They were merely a pair of white ruffle-cuffed absurdities, hitched toether at the top with a narrow band, and they did not come quite down to my knees. They were pretty enough, but they made me feel like two people, and disconnected at that. The man must have been an idiot that got himself up like that, to rough it in the Swim mountains. The shirt they brought me was shorter than the drawers, and hadn't any sleeves to it-at the least it hadn't anything more than what Mr. Darwin would call 'rudimentary' sleeves; these had edging around them, but the bosom was ridiculously plain. The knit silk undershirts they brought me was on a new plan. and was really a sensible thing; it opened behind, and had pockets in it to put your shoulder blades in ; but they did not seem to fit mine, and so I found it a sort of uncomfortable garment. They gave my bobtail coat to somebody else, and sent me an ulster suitable for a giraffe. I had to tie my collar on, because there was no button behind on that foolish little shirt which I described a while ago.

When I was dressed for dinner at 6:30, I was too loose in some places and too tight in others, and altogether I felt slovenly and ill conditioned. However, the people at the table d'hote were no better off than I was; they had everybedy's clothes but their own on. A long stranger recognized his ulster as soon as he saw the tail of it following me in, but nobody claimed my shirts or my drawers, though I described them as well as I was able. I gave the to the chambermaid that night when I went to bed, and she probably found the owner, for my own things were non a chair outside my door in the morning, and of section and section.

There was a lovable English elergyman who did not get to the table d'hote at all. His brecches had sturned up imissing, and without any equivalent. He said he was not more particular than other people, but he had noticed it that a clergyman at dinner without any brecches was almost sure to excite remark.

TO THE CHAPTER XXXIV. These corte

We did not oversleep at St. Nicholas. The church bell began to ring at 4:30 in the morning and from the length of time it continued to ring I judged that it takes the Swiss sinner a good while to get the invita-tion through his head. Most church bells in the world are of poor quality, and have a harsh and rasping sound which upsets the temper and produces much sin, but the St. Nicholas bell is a good deal the worst one that has been contrived yet, and is peculiarly maddening in its operation. Still, it may have its right and its excuse to exist, for the community is poor and not every citizen can afford a clock, perhaps; but there cannot be any excuse for our church bells at home, for there is no family in America without a clock, and consequently there is no fair pretext for the usual Sunday medley of dreadful sounds that issues from our steeples. There is much more profanity in America on Sunday than in all the other six days of the week put together, and it is of more bitter and malignant character than the week-day profanity, too. It is produced by the oracked-pot clanger of the cheap church bells.

We build our churches almost without without regard to cost; we rear an edifice which is an adornment to the town, and we gild it, and freecoe it, and mortgage it, and do everything we can think of to perfect it, and then spoil it all by putting a bell on it which afflicts everybody who hears it, giving some the headsohe, others St. Vitus's dauce, and the rest the blind-staggers.

An American village at ten o'clock on a summer Sunday is the quietest and peacefulest and holiest thing in nature; but it is a pretty different thing in hat ne hour later, Mr. Poe's poem of the 'Bells' trands incomplete to this day; but it is well enough that it is so, for the public reciter or 'reader' who goes around trying to imitate the sounds of the various sorts of bells with his voice would find himself 'up a stump' when he got to the church bell-sa Joseph Addison would say. The church is always trying to get other people to reform the might not be a bed idea to reform itself a little, by way of example. It is still clinging to one or two things which were useful once, but which are not useful now, neither are they ornamental. One is the bell-ringing to remind a clock-caked town that it is church time, and another is the reading from the pulpit of a stedious list of 'notices' which everybody who is interested has already read in the newspaper. The clergyman even reads the hymn through,—a relic of an ancient time when hymn books were scarce and costly ; but everybody has a hymn book, now, and so the public reading is no longer necessary, it is not merely unnecessary it is generally painful; for the average clergyman could not fire into his congregation with a shotgun and hit a worse reader than himself, unless the weapon scattered shamefully. I am not meaning to be fflippant and irreverent, I am only meaning to be truthful. The average clergyman, in all countries and of all denominations, is a very bad reader. One would think he would at least learn how to read the Lord's Prayer, by and by, but it is not so. He races through it as if he thought the quicker he got it in, the sooner it would be answered. A person who does not appreciate the exceeding value of pauses, and does not know how to measure their duration judiciously, cannot render the grand simplicity and dignity of a composition like that effectively.

We took a tolerably early breakfast, and tramped off toward Zermatt through the reeking lanes of the village, glad to get away from that bell. By and by we had a fine spectale on our right. It was the walllike butt end of a huge glacier, which looked down on us from an Alpine height which was well up in the blue sky. It was an astonishing amount of ice to be compacted together in one mass. We ciphered upon it and decided that it was not less than several hundred feet from the base of the wall of the solid ice to the top of it-Harris believed it was really twice that. We jud-ged that if St. Paul's, St. Peter's, the Great Pyramid, the Strasburg Cathedral and the Capitol at Washington were clustered against that wall, a man sitting on its upper edge could not hang his hat on the top of any one of them without reaching down three or four hundred feet-a thing which of course no man could do.

To me, that mighty glacier was very beautiful. I did not imagine that anybody could find fault with it; but I was mistaken. Harris had to been a marling for several days. He was a rabid Protestant, several days. He was a rabid Protestant, and he was always saying,— it saws lead (not only in the Protestant cantons you never see such poverty and dirt and squalor as you do in this Catholic one; you never see the lance and alleys flowing with foulness; you never see an inverted tin turnip on top of a church for a dome; and as for a church ball why you never a church ball at bell, why you never hear a church bell at All this morning he had been finding fault, straight along. First it was with the mud. He said, 'It sin't muddy in a Pro-testant canton when it rains.' Then it was with the dogs: 'They don't have those lopeared dogs in a Protestant canton.! Then it was with the roads: 'They don't leave the roads to make themselves in a Protestant canton, the people make them,—and they make a road that is road, too.' Next it was the goats: "You never see a goat shedding tears in a Protestant canton—a goat, there, is one of the cheerfulest objects in nature.'

Next it was the chamois: 'You never see a Protestant chamois act like one of these. they take a bite or two and go; but these fellows camp with you and stay. Then it was the guide-boards: 'In a Protestant carton you couldn't get lost if you wanted to. but you never see a guide-board in a Catholic canton. Next, 'You never see any flowerboxes in the windows, here,—never anything but now and then a cat,—a torpid one; but vou take a Protestant canton, windows perfeetly levely with flowers, -and as for cats, there's just acres of them. These folks in this canton leave a road to make itself, and then fine you three francs if you 'trot over it—as if a horse could trot over such a sar-casm of a road. Next about the goitre: They talk about goitre !- I have'nt seen a goitre in this whole canton that I could'nt put in a hat.

PW Peiole RWIVE

報用を記載を記載を記載をのの B 日本のの B を記述を記述してはは

He had growled at everything, but I judged it would puzzle him to find anything the matter with this majestic glacier. I intimated as much; but he was ready, and said with surly discontent,—

You ought to see them in the Protesttant cantons.

This irritated me. But I concealed the feeling, and asked,-

What is the motter with this one? "Matter? Why, it ain't in any kind of condition. They never take any care of a glacier here. The moraine has been spilling gravel around it, and got it all dirty.'

'Why, man, they can't help that.'
'They? You're right. That is, they won't.
They could if they wanted to. You never see lings for testant

CYCE : 500 you do DOVOE top of a bell at

with the in a Pron it was hose lop-'t leave and they xt it was ahedding t, there, nature. VOT BOO B these,out these Then it tant cal anted to, Catholio y floweranything one ; but lows perfor cats, o folks in teelf, and rot over sch a sare goitre: nt seen a could'nt nt I judgthing the I intimatand said

Protestcealed the

ne ! y kind of care of a en spilling

hey won't Dever see a speck of dirt on a Protestant glacier. Look at the Rhone glacier. It is fifteen miles long, and seven hundred feet think. If this was a Protestant glacier you wouldn't see it looking like this, I can tell you.

That is nonsense. What would they do with it?

They would whitewash it. They always

I did not believe a word of this, but rather than have trouble I let it go; for it is a waste of breath to argue with a bigot. I even doubted if the Rhone glacier was in a Protestant canton; but I did not know, so I could not make anything by contradicting a man who would probably put me down at once with manufactured evidence.

About nine miles from St. Nicholas we crossed a bridge over the raging torrent of the Visp, and came to a long strip of filmsy fencing which was pretending to secure people from tambling over a perpendicular wall into the river. Three children were approaching, one of them, a little girl about eight years old, was running: when pretty close to us she stumbled and fell, and her feet shot under the rail of the fence and for a moment projected over the stream. It gave us a sharp shock, for we thought she was gone, sure, for the ground slanted steeply, and to save herself seemed a sheer impos-sibility; but she managed to scramble up, and ran by us laughing.

We went forward and examined the place and saw the long tracks which her feet had made in the dirt when they darted over the verge. If she had finished her trip she would have struck some big rocks in the edge of the water, and then the torrent would have snatched her down stream among the halfpounded to pulp in two minutes. We had come exceedingly near witnessing her death. covered bowlders and she would have been

And now Harris' contrary nature and inborn selfishness were strikingly manifested. He has no spirit of self-denial. He began straight off, and continued for an hour, to express, his gratitude that the child was not destroyed. I never saw such a man. That was the kind of person he was; just so he was gratified, he never cared anything about anybody else. I had noticed this trait in him over and over again. Often, of course, it was mere heedlessness, more want of reflection. Doubtless this may have been the case in most instances, but it was not the less hard to bear on that account—and after all, its bottom, its groundwork, was selfishness. There is no avoiding that conclusion. In the instance under consideration, I did think the indecency of running on in that way isolation, and its majestic unkinehip with its might occur to him ; but no, the child was saved and he away glad; that was sufficient he cared not a straw for my feelings, or my loss of such a literary plum, snatched from my very mouth as the instant it was ready to drop into it. His selfishness was sufficient to place his own gratification in being spared suffering clear before all concern for me, his friend, Apparently he did not once reflect upon the valuable details which would have fallen like a windfall to me: fishing the child out-witnessing the surprise of the family and the stir the thing would have made among the peasants—then a Swiss funeral—then the roadside monument, to be paid for by us and have our names mentioned in it.

And we should have gone into Baedeker and been immortal. I was silent, all was too much hurt to complain. If he could act so, and be so heedless and so frivolous at such a time, and actually seem to glory in it, after all I had done for him, I would have out my hand off before I would let him see that I was wounded.

We were approaching Zermats; consequently we were approaching the renowned Matterhorn, A month before, this mountain had been only a nameftojus, but latterly we had been moving through a steadily thickening double row of pictures of it, done in oil, water, chromo, wood, steel, copper, crayon and photography, and so it had at length become a shape to us -and a very distinct, decided, and familiar one too. We were expecting to recognize that mountain whenever or wherever we should run across it. We were not deceived. ... The monarch was far away when we first waw him, but there was no such thing as mistaking him. He has the rare peculiarity of standing by himself; he is peculiarly steep, two, and is also most oddly shaped. He towers into the sky like a colossal wedge, with the upper third of its blade bent a little to the left. The broad base of this monster wedge is planted upon a grand glacier paved Alpine platform, whose elevation is ten thousand feet above sea level; as the wedge itself is some five thousand feet high, it follows that its apex is about fifteen thousand feet above sea level. So the whole bulk of this stately piece of rock, this sky-cleaving monolith, is above the line of eternal snow. EYet while all its giant neighbours have the look of being built of solid snow, from their waists up, the Matterhorn stands black and saked and forbidding, the year round, or merely powdered or streaked with white in places, for its sides are se steep that the snew can-not stay there. Its strange form, its acquist own kind, make it—so to speak—the Napoleon of the mountain world. "Grand, gloomy, and peculiar," is a phrase which fits it as aptly as it fitted the great captain.

Think of a monument a mile high, at anding on a pedestal two miles high? This is what the lifetterhors is—a monument. Its office, henceforth, for all time, will be to keep watch and ward over the teoret restingplace of young Lord Douglas, who, in 1865, was precipitated from the summit over a precipice 4,000 feet high, and never seen again. No man ever had such a monument as this before; the meet imposing of the world's other monuments are but atoms compared to it; and they will perish, and their places will pass from memory, but this will remain.

A walk from St. Nicholas to Zermatt is a wonderful experience. Nature is built on a stupendous plan in that region. One marches continually between walls that are piled into the skies, with their upper heights broken into a confusion of sublime shapes, that glean white and cold against the background of blue; and here and there one sees a big glacier displaying its grendeurs on the top of a precipice, or a graceful eascade leaping and flashing down the green declivities. There is nothing tame, or cheap, or trivial—it is all magnificent. That short valley is a picture gallery of a notable, kind, for it contains no medicorities; from end to end the Creator has hung it with his masterpieces.

We made Zermatt at 3 in the afternoon, nine hours out from St. Nicholas. Distance, by guide-book, 12 miles, by pedometer 72. We were in the heart and home of the mountain-climbers, now, as visible things testified. The snow-peaks did not hold themselves aloof, in aristocratic reserve, they nestled close around, in a friendly, sociable way; guides, with the ropes and axes, and other implements of their fearful calling slung about their persons, roosted in a long line upon a stone wall in front of the hotel, and waited for customers; sunburned climbers, in mountaineering coatume, and followed by their guides and porters, arrived from time to time, from break-neck expeditions among the peaks and glaciers of the High Alps; male and female tourists, on mules, filed by, in a sontinuous procession, hotelward bound from wild adventures (which would grow in grandour every time they were described at the English or American fireside, and at last outgrow the possible itself.

We were not dreaming this was not a make believe home of the Alp-climbar, created by our heated imaginations; ho, created by our heated imaginations; no, for here was Mr. Girdiestone himself, the famous Englishman who hunts his way to the most formidable Alpine summits without a guide. I was not equal to imagining a Girdlestone; it was all I could do to even realise him, while looking straight at him at short range. I would rather face whole Hyde Parks of artillery than the ghastly forms of death which he has faced among the peaks and precipioes of the mountains. There is probably no pleasure equal to the pleasure of climbing a dangerous Alp, but it is a pleasure which is confined strictly to people who can find pleasure in it. I have not jumped to this conclusion; I have travelled to it per gravel train, so to speak. I have thought the thing all out, and am quite sure I am right. A born climber's appetite for climbing is hard to satisfy; when it comes upon him he is like a starving man with a feast before him; he may have other business on hand, but it must wait. Mr. Girdlestone had had his usual summer holiday in the Alps, and had spent it in his usual way, hunting for unique chances to break his neck; his vacation was over. and his luggage packed for England, but all of a sudden a hunger had come upon him to climb the tremendous Weisshorn once more. for he had heard of a new and utterly im-pessible route up it. His baggage was unpacked at once, and now he and a friend, laden with knapsacks, ice-axes, coils of rope, and canteens of milk, were just setting out. They would spend the night high up among the enows, somewhere, and get up at 2 in the morning and finish the enterprise. I had a strong desire to go with them, but forced it down—a feat which Mr. Girdlestone, with all his fortitude, could not do.

C

at

th

be

ze

be

do

ot

hi

hi

col

th

DA

an

in.

tu

M

alo

He

of

it.

arc

do

Even ladies catch the climbing mania, and are unable to throw it off. A famous climber, of that sex, had attempted the Weisshorn a few days before our arrival, and she and her guides had lost their way in a snowstorm high up among the peaks and glaciers and been forced to wander around a good while before they could find a way down. When this lady reached the bottom, she had been on her feet twenty-three hours!

Our guides, hired on the Gemmi, were already at Zermatt when we reached there. So there was nothing to interfere with our getting up an adventure whenever we should choose the time and the object. I resolved to devote my first evening in Zermatt to studying up the subject of Alpine climbing, which e they by way of preparation.

* The accident which cost Lord Douglas his life, (see chapter 41) also cost the lives of three other men. These three fell four-fifths of a mile, and their bodies were afterwards found, lying side by side, upon a glacier, whence they were aborne to Zermatt and buried in the churchard. The remains of Lord Douglas have never been found. The seerst of his sepulture, like that of Moses, must remain a mystery always.

not a limber, alf, the

to the bout a ining a him at whole ghastly

among intains.

l to the

p, but

I have speak. and am

imber's

satisfy; tarving

summer it in his

nces to over, but all

him to e more,

rly imwas un-

friend,

of rope,

ing out. among

at 2 in forced ne, with

nia, and

famous ed the val, and

way in

aks and round a y down. she had

Were d there with our

s should

I read several books, and here are some of the things I found out. One's shoes must be strong and heavy, and have pointed hob-nails in them. The alpenetock must be of the best wood, for if it should break, less of life might be the result. One should carry an axe, to cut steps in the ice with on the great heights. There must be a ladder, for there are steep bits of rock which can be surmounted with this instrument—or this utensil—but could not be surmounted without it; such an obstruction has compelled the tourist to waste hours hunting another route, when a ladder would have saved him all trouble. One must have from 150 to 500 feet of strong rope, to be used in lowering the party down steep declivities which are too steep and smooth to be traversed in any other way. One must have a steel hook, od another rope, a very useful thing; for when one is ascending and comes to a low bluff which is yet too high for the ladder, he swings this rope aloft like a lasso, the hook catches at the top of the bluff, and then the tourist climbs, hand over handbeing always particular to try and forget that if the hook gives way he will never stop falling till he arrives in some part of Switzerland where they are not expecting him. Another important thing—there must be a rope to tie the whole party together with, so that if one falls from a mountain or down a bottomless chasm in a glacier, the others may brace back on the rope and save him. One must have a silk veil, to protect his face from snow, sleet, hail and gale, and coloured goggles to protect his eyes from that dangerous enemy snow-blindness. Finally, there must be some porters to carry provisions, wine and scientific instrument and also blanket bags for the party to sleep

I closed my reading with a fearful adventure which Mr. Whymper once had on the Matterhorn when he was prowling around alone, 5,000 feet above the town of Breil. He was edging his way gingerly, around the corner of a precipice where the upper edge of a sharp declivity of ice-glazed snow joined it. This declivity awept down a couple of hundred feet, into a gully which curved around and ended at a precipice 800 feet high, overlooking a glacier. His foot slipped, and he fell. He says:

My knapsack brought my head down first, and I pitched into some rocks about a dozen feet below; they caught something, and tumbled me off the edge, head ever heels, into the gully; the baton was dashed from my hands, and I whirled downwards in a series of bounds, each longer than the last; a series of bounds, each longer than the last; now over ice, now into rocks, striking my head four or five times, each time with increased force. The last bound sent me spinning through the air in a leap of fifty or sixty feet, from one side of the gully to the ther, and I struck the rocks, luckily, with the whole of my left side. They caught my clothes for a moment, and I fell back on to the anew with motion arrested. My head fortunately came the right side up, and a few frantic catches brought me to a halt, in the neck of the gully and on the verge of the precipiose. Baton, hat and veil skimmed by the neck of the gully and on the verge of the precipice. Baton, hat and veil skimmed by and disappeared, and the orash of the rocks—which I had started—as they fell on to the glacier, told how narrow had been the escape from utter destruction. As it was, I fell nearly 200 feet in seven or eight bounds. Ten feet more would have taken me in one gigantic leap of 800 feet on to the glacier below. below.

"The situation was sufficiently serious. The rocks could not be let go for a moment, and the blood was spurting out of more than twenty cuts. The most serious ones were in the head, and I vainly tried to close them with one hand, whilst holding on with the other. It was 'useless; the blood gushed out in blinding jets 'at each pulsation.' At last, in a moment of inspiration, I kicked out a big lump of snow and stuck it as plaster on my head. The idea was a happy one, and the flow of blood diminished. Then, scrambling up, I got, not a moment too soon, to a place of safety, and fainted away. The sun was setting when consciousness returned, and it was pitch dark before the Great Staircase was descended; but by a combination of luck and care, the whole 4,700 feet of descent to Breil was accomplished without a slip, or once missing the way.

His wounds kept him abed some days.
Then he got up and climbed that mountain again. That is the way with a true Alpclimber; the more fan he has, the more he

CHAPTER XXXVIL

After I had finished my readings, I was no longer myself; I was tranced, uplifted, intoxicated, by the almost incredible perils and adventures I had been following my authors through, and the triumphs I had been sharing with them. I sat silent some time, and then turned to Harris and said—

' My mind is made up.'

Something in my tene struck him; and when he glanced at my eye and read what was written there, his face paled perceptibly. He heatsated a moment, then aidroger of bounds, each mager Speak. I answered with perfect calmness. I will ascend the Rifferlberg.

If I had shot my poor friend he could not have fallen from his chair more suddenly. If I had been his father he could not have pleaded harder to get me to give up my pur-pose. But I turned a deaf ear to all he said. When he perceived at last that nothing could alter my determination, he ceased to urge, and for a while other last in marble broken only by his cote. I sat in marble resolution, with my eyes fixed upon vacancy, for in spirit I was already wrestling with the perils of the mountains, and my friend sat gazing at me in adoring admiration through his tears. At last he threw himself upon me in a loving embrace and exclaimed in broken tones:

Your Harris will never desert you. We will die together !'

I cheered the noble fellow with praises, and soon his fears were forgotten and he was eager for the adventure. He wanted to summon the guides at once and leave at two in the morning, as he supposed the custom was; but I explained that nobody was looking, at that hour; and that the start in the dark was not usually made from the village but from the first night's resting place on the mountain side. I said we would leave the village at three or four p.m. on the morrow; meantime he could notify the guides, and also let the public know of the attempt which we proposed to make.

1 went to bed, but not to sleep. No man can sleep when he is about to undertake one of these lipine exploits. I tossed feveriably all night long, and was glad enough when I heard the clock strike half past eleven and knew it was time to get up for dinner. I rose jaded and rusty, and went to the noon meal, where I found myself the centre of interest and ouriosity; for the news was already abroad. It is not easy to eat calmly when you are a lion, but it is very pleasant, nevertheless.

As usual, at Zermatt, when a great ascent is about to be undertaken, everybody, native and foreign, laid aside his own projects and took up a good position to observe the start. The expedition consisted of 198 persons, inoluding the mules; or 205, including the cows. As follows:

CHIRPS OF SERVICE.

COST 210 2 21 614

Myself, GH to 124 Mr. Harris, 416, 7574

The second of th
a Surgeone.
foil, me ner fiet genth Jenann . liot 3 Chaplains.
TAKE THE PLANSE OF ANY OF A POST OF SALES 15 Barkeepers
al latitude, hear extract his you have !
to an in the transfer of the property of the group of feets our levals, this is that the groots 1 Veterinary Burgeon." diend at that 1 Veterinary Burgoon to dient of their 18 Butler. For a not to the first their of the their section of the sect life might be the requit to Plantian in old at age to one of ,exa us I lefted Cook for Steel and treed a strain Assistants of the state of the same of Pastry Cooks. Artistiw indaugatus Confectionery Artistiw indaugatus and A Contestionery Artist
TRANSPORTATION, ETC. Leftuent extravelled the souriet to we be here abantin Porters what a mater warms radiana Mules (1) . All wors lie mid frozen 44 Muletocca.
3 Course Washers and Ironers, 0.7, od 074
31. Pine ditto. amob ginner ada garreravi Tilkers. The bongs of rot est flights
* VIII to the transfer to a continuation li ti pto

hi at gt

m ai o

vi

to

ho

m

to all the assertion of a lili for de mi

Total, 154 men, 51 animals. Grand Total, 20%.

CHILL STATE OF STATE STATES La Co RATIONS, ETC. Sold woll and 16 Cases Hatte, 1 stell sammer of medball
2 Rarrela Flour, if all we lotte de mi auti 23 Barrels Whiskey, 5 Int it f sitt todd
1 Barrel Sugar. 1 Keg Lemons.
CONCRETE FOR ENDING 25 FER NOT THE THE TRANSPORT
1. Reprol Dies or why are a this author
1 Ton of Pemmican.
2 Barrels Arnica.
1 Bale of Lint we said to a page and 27 Kegs Paregorie. Fags at terit pa datw in the control of the 25 Spring Mattrasses. ( Water 201) 'th' e 2 Hair ditto, i vie tumber chart hand or Bedding for same.

2 Mosquito Nets. 29 Tents. or Scientific Instruments, a shorte, rileve 5. Cases Dynamite.
7 Cases Dynamite.
22 40-foot Ladders.
2 Miles of Ripe.
154 Umbrellas, gamen in the politic arest

It was full four o'clock in the afternoon before my cavalcade was entirely ready. At that hour it began to move. In point of numbers and spectacular effect, it was the most imposing expedition that had ever marched from Zermatt.

I commanded the chief guide to arrange the men and animals in single file, twelve feet apart, and lash them all together on a strong rope: "He objected that the first two miles was a dead level, with plenty of room, and that the rope was never used except in very dangerous places. But I would not listen to that. My reading had taught me that many serious secidente had happened that many serious accidents had happened in the Alpa simply from not having the people tied up seen enough; I was not going to add one to the list. The guide then obeyed my order.

When the procession stood at ease, roped together, and ready to move, I never saw a fiser sight. It was 3,122 feet long—over half a mile; every man but Harris and me was on foot, and had on his green veil and his blue goggles, and his white rag around his hat, and his coil of rope over one shoulder and under the other, and his ice axe in his belt, and carried his alpenstock in his left hand, his umbrella (closed) in his right; and his orutchumbrella (closed) in his right, and his crutches slung at his back. The burdens of the pack mules and the horns of the cows were decked with the Edelweiss and the Alpine rose.

I and my agent were the only persons mounted. We were in the post of danger, mounted. We were in the post of danger, in the extreme rear, and tied securely to five guides apiece. Our armour bearers carried our ice-axes, alpenatecks and other implements for us. We were mounted upon very small donkeys, as a measure of safety; in time of peril we could straighten our legs and stand up, and let the denkey walk from under. Still, I cannot recommend this sort animal—at least for excursions of mere pleasure because his care interrupt the view. I and my agent possessed the regulation mountaineering costumes, but concluded to leave them behind. Out of respect for the great numbers of tourists of both sexes who would be assembled in front of the hotels to see us pass, and also out of respect for the many tourists whom we expected to encounter on our expedition, we decided to make the ascent in evening dress.

At 15 minutes past 4 I gave the command to move, and my subordinates passed it along the line. The great crowd in front of the Monte Rosa hotel parted in twain, with a cheer, as the procession approached; and as the head of it was filing by I gave the erder, 'Unlimber—make ready—hoist!' and with one impulse up went my half mile of umbrellas. It was a beautiful sight, and a total surprise to the spectators. Nothing like that had ever been seen in the Alps be-fore. The applause it brought forth was deeply gratifying to me, and I rode by with my plug hat in my hand to attest my appra-ciation of it. It was the only testimony I could offer, for I was too full to speak.

We watered the caravan at the cold stream which rushes down a trough near the end of the village, and seem afterwards left the haunts of civilization behind us. About half past 5 o'clook we arrived at a bridge which spans About half past the Visp, and after throwing over a detachment to see if it was safe, the caravan crossed without accident. The way now led, by a gentle ascent, carpeted with fresh green grass, to the church of Winkelmatten. Without stopping to examine this editice, I executed a flank movement, to the right and orcesed the bridge over the Findelenbach, after first testing its strength. Here I deployed to the right again, and presently entered an inviting stretch of meadow land which was uncocupied save by a couple of deserted hute towards its furthest extremity. These meadows effered an excellent camping These messages energy and executive place. We pitched our tente, supped, established a proper guard, recorded the events of the day, and then went to bed.

We rose at two in the morning and dress.

ed by candle light. It was a dismal and chilly business. A few stars were shining, but the general heavens were overcast, and the great shaft of the Matterhorn was draped in a sable pall of clouds. The chief guide advised a delay; he said he feared it was going to rain. We waited until nine o'clock, going to rain. We waited until nine o'clock, and then got away in tolerably clear weather.

Our course led up some terrible steeps, densely wooded with larchers and cedars, and traversed by paths which the rains had guttered and which were obstructed by loose stones. To add to the danger and inconvenience, we were constantly meeting returning tourists on foot or horseback, and as constantly being crowded and battered by ascending tourists who were in a hurry and wanted to get by.

Our troubles thickened. About the middle of the afternoon the seventeen guides called a halt and held a consultation. After consulting an hour they said their first sus-pictor remained intact,—that is to say, they believed they were lost. I saked if they did not know it? No, they said, they couldn't absolutely know whether they were lost or not, because none of them had ever been in that part of the country before. They had a strong instinct that they were lost, but they had no proofs,—except that they did not know where they were. They had met no tourists for some time, and they consider-

Plainly we were in an ugly fix. The guides were naturally unwilling to go alone and seek a way out of the difficulty; so we all went together. For better security we moved slew and cantiously, for the forest was very dense. We did not move up the mountain but around it, hoping to strike across the old trail. Toward nightfall, when

point of had ever

gergraging

Sate

16 V. W. 11 F di sidt grions i islan the bre 111 477 exa os i i oro

10 HO11128 ir gifit

ម៉ាំង២១៣៖

d. F-6-100

. 68 07,5

โฮทายสาย

which a

Fotal 805 e sullet will a ud intder.

to go but

ialh a b

Aunthor It to beach

os diew BEACD

18 975 Adis

J 181

LIB Park

1 sin dan

it , Mes

willivoru UP 1 11.76

mole i

INDE GIBS afternoom

.cl

to arrange e, twelve ther on a e first two y of room, except in would not we were about tired ont, we came up against a rock as big as a cottage. This barrier took all the remaining spirit out of the men, and a panic of feer and despair ensued. They mound and wept, and said they should never see their homes and their dear ones again. Then they began to upbraid me for bringing them upon this fatal expedition. Some even muttered threats against ma. Clearly it was no time to show weakness.

Clearly it was no time to show weakness. So I made a speech, in which I said that other Alp climbers had been in as perilous a position as this, and yet by courage and perseverance had escaped. I promised to stand by them, I promised to rescue them. I closed by saying we had plenty of provisions to maintain us for quite a siege,—and did they suppose Zermatt would allow half a mile of men and mules to mysteriously disappear during any considerable time, right above their noses, and make no inquiries? No, Zermatt would send out searching expeditions and we should be

This speech had a great effect. The men pitched the tents with some little show of obserfulness, and we were snugly under cover when the night shut down. I now eaped the reward of my wisdom in providing one article which is not mentioned in any book of Alpine adventure but this. I refer to the paregorio. But for that bensficent drug, not one of those men would have slept a moment during that fearful night. But for that gentle persuader they must have tossed, unsoothed, the night throughforthe whiskey was for me. Yes, they would have risen in the morning unfitted for their heavy task. As it was, everybody slept but my agent and me—only we two and the barkeepers. I would not permit myself to sleep at such a time. I considered myself responsible for all those lives. I meant to be on hand and ready, in case of avalanches. I am aware now that there were no avalanches up there, but I did not know it then

We watched the weather all through that awful night, and kept an eye on the barometer, to be prepared for the least change. There was not the slightest change recorded by the instrument during the whole time. Words cannot describe the comfort that friendly, hopeful, steadfast thing was to me in that season of trouble. It was a defective barometer, and had no hand but the stationary brass pointer, but I did not know that until afterward. If I should be in such a situation again, I should not wish for any barometer but that one.

All hands rose at 2 in the morning and took breakfast, and as soon as it was light more on top of them. Upon this bridge I we roped ourselves together and went at caused a bed of boughs to be spread. I that rook. For some time we tried the hook-rope and other means of scaling it, but without success. That is without perfect success. The hook caught once, and Harris started up it hand over hand, but the hold broke, and if there had not happened to be a chaplain sitting underneath at the time, Harris would certainly have been orippled. As it was, it was the chaplain. He took to his crutches, and I ordered the hook-rope to be laid aside. It was too dangerous an implement where so many people were standing around.

we were puzzled for a while; then somebody thought of the ladders. One of these was leaved against the rock, and the men went up it tied together in couples. Another ladder was sent up for use in descending. At the end of half an hour everybody was over, and that rock was conquered. We gave our first grand shout of triumph. But the joy was short-lived, for somebody asked how we were going to get the animals over.

This was a serious difficulty; in fact it was an impossibility. The courage of the men began to waver immediately; once more we were threatened with a panic. But when the danger was most imminent, we were saved in a mysterious way. A mule which had attracted attention from the beginning by its disposition to experiment, tried to eat a five-pound can of nitro-glycerine. This happened right alongside the rock. The explosion threw us all to the ground, and covered us with dirt and debris; it frightened us extremely, too, for the crash it made was deafening, and the violence of the shock made the ground tremble. However, we were grateful, for the rock was gone. Its place was occupied by a new cellar, about thirty feet across, by fifteen feet deep. The explosion was heard as far as Zermatt; and an hour and a half afterward, many citizens of that town were knocked down and quite seriously injured by descending portions of mule meat, frozen solid. This shows, better than any estimate in figures how high the experimenter went.

We had nothing to do, now, but bridge the cellar and proceed on our way. With a cheer the men went at their work. I attended to the engineering, myself. I appointed a strong detail to cut down trees with ice-axes and trim them for piers to support the bridge. This was a slow business, for ice-axes are not good to cut wood with. I caused my piers to be firmly set up in ranks in the cellar, and upon them I laid six of my forty-foot ladders, side by side, and laid six more on top of them. Upon this bridge I caused a bed of boughs to be spread. I take N for a nato orep ent fact oum ethe not o mus befor then · De muet tuna cont to al quar end d told CATAY hims raili

A to

ed, a amon solf, thing quite some to get to bre ceive last, den a solute three Watel Wa the or inqui

in cas series dition

anxiet
Thi
the vi
succor
a serie
hardli
up, saved
the lo

he h

tried the t perfect the hold ened to be the time, orippled. He took to ok-rope to ous an im-then someof these the men a. Another ending. At Te gave our t the joy over.

vere stand-

; in fact it age of the nediately ; th a panic. om the beiment, tried o-glycerine. e rock. The ground, and ; it frightof the shock lowever, we rock was et across, nd an hour zens of that nite seriousone of mule better than igh the ext bridge the y. With a york. I at-self. I ap-down trees piers to supw busir.ess, wood with. up in ranks and laid six is bridge I spread.

신설

stretched ropes upon either side to serve as railings, and then my bridge was complete. A train of elephants could have crossed it in safety and comfort. By nightfall the caravan was on the other side and the ladders taken up.

Next morning we went on in good spirits for a while, though our way was slow and difficult, by reason of the steep and rocky nature of the ground and the thickness of the forest; but at last a dull despondency crept into the men's faces and it was apparent that not only they, but even the guides, were now convinced that we were lost. The fact that we still met no tourists was a circumetance that was but too significant. Another thing seemed to suggest that we were not only lost, but very badly lost: for there must surely be searching-parties on the road before this time, yet we had seen no sign of Demoralization was spreading; something must be done, and done quickly, too. tunately, I am not unfertile in expedients, I contrived one now which commended itself to all, for it promised well. I took threequarters of a mile of rope and fastened one end of it around the waist of a guide, and told him to go and find the road, whilst the caravan waited. I instructed him to guide himself back by the rope, in case of failure; in case of success, he was to give the rope a series of violent jerks, whereupon the Expedition would go to him at once. He departed, and in two minutes had disappeared among the trees. I payed out the rope myself, while everybody watched the crawling thing with eager eyes. The rope crept away quite alowly, at times, at other times with some briskness. Twice or thrice we seemed to get the signal, and a shout was just ready to break from the men's lips when they perceived that it was a false alarm. But at last, when over half a mile of rope had slidden away, it stopped gliding and stood absolutely still—one minute—two minutes three-while we held our breath and watched.

Was the guide resting? Was he scanning the country from some high point? Was hinquiring of a chance mountaineer? Stop, he had fainted from excess of fatigue and anxiety!

This thought gave us a shock. I was in the very act of detailing an expedition to succour him, when the cord was assailed with a serious of such frantic jerks that I could hardly keep hold of it. The huzza that went up, then, was good to hear. 'Saved!' saved!' was the word that rang out, all down the long rank of the caravan.

We rese up and started at once. We found the route to be good enough for a while, but it began to grow difficult, by and by, and this feature steadily increased. When we judged we had gone half a mile, we momently expected to see the guide; but no, he was not visible anywhere; neither was he waiting, for the rope was still moving, consequently he was doing the same. This argued that he had not found ame. This argued that he had not found the road yet, but was marching to it with some peasant. There was nothing for us to do but pled along—and this we did. At the end of three hours we were still plodding. This was not only mysterious, but exasperating. And very fatiguing, too; for we had tried hard, along at first; to catch up with the guide, but had only fagged ourselves in value; for although he was travelling alongly by was yet able to on faster than the slowly be was yet able to go faster than the hampered caravan over such ground.

At three in the afternoon we were nearly dead with exhaustion—and still the rope was slowly gliding out. The murmurs against the guide had been growing steadily, and at last they were heaven. last they were become loud and savage. A mutiny ensued. The men refused to proceed. They declared that we had been travelling over and over the same ground all day, in a kind of circle. They demanded that our end of the rope be made fast to a tree, so as to halt the guide until we could overtake him and kill him. This was not an unreasonable requirement, so I gave the order.

As soon as the rope was tied, the Expedition moved forward with the alacrity which the thirst for vengeance usually inspires. But after a tiresome march of almost half a mile, we came to a hill covered thick with a crumbly rubbish of stones, and so steep that no man of us all was now in a condition to climb it. Every attempt failed, and ended in orippling somebody. Within twenty minutes I had five men on crutches. Whenever a climber tried to assist himself by the rope, it yielded and let him tumble backwards. The frequency of this result suggested an idea to me. I ordered the caravan to bout face and form in marching order; I then made the tow-rope fast to the rear mule and gave the command—
"Mark time—by the right flack—forward march !"

The procession began to move, to the impressive strains of a battle-chant, and I said to myself, 'Now, if the rope don't break I judge this will fetch that guide into the camp.' I watched the rope gliding down the hill, and presently when I was all fixed for triumph I was confronted by a bitter disappointment: there was no guide tied to the rope, it was only a very indignant old black ram. The fury of the baffled Expedition exceeded all bounds. They even wanted to wreak their unreasoning vangeance on this innocent dumb brute. But I stood between them and their prey, menaced by a bristling wall of ice-axes and alpen-stocks, and proclaimed that there was but one road to this murder, and it was directly over my corpse. Even as I spoke I saw that my doom was sealed, except a miracle superrened to divert these madmen from their fell purpose. I see that sickening wall of weapons now; I see that advancing host as I saw it then. I see the hate in those oruel eyes; I remember how I drooped my head upon my breast, I feel again the audden earthquake shock in my rear, administered by the very ram I was ascrificing myself to save, I hear once more the typhoon of laughter that burst from the assaulting column as I clove it from van to rear like a Sepoy shot from a Rodman gun.

I was saved. Yes, I was saved, and by the merciful instinct of ingratitude which nature had planted in the breast of that treacherous beast. The grace which eloquence had failed to work in those men's we lived to find out that that guide had deserted us as soon as he had placed a half mile between himself and us. To avert suspicion, he had judged it best that the line should continue to move; so he caught that ram, and at the time that he was sitting on it making the rope fast to it, we were imagining that he was lying in a swoon, overcome by fatigue and diatress. When he allowed the ram to get up it fell to plunging around, trying to rid itself of the rope, and this was the signal which we had risen up with glad shouts to obey. We had followed with glad shouts to obey. We had followed this ram round and round in a circle all day -a thing which was proven by the discovery that we had watered the Expedition seven times at one and the same apring in seven hours. As expert a woodman as I am, I had somehow failed to notice this until my attention was called to it by a hog. was always wallowing there, and as he was the only hog we saw, his frequent repeti-tion, together with his unvarying similarity to himself, finally caused me to reflect that he must be the same log, and this led me to the deduction that this must be the same spring, also,—which indeed it was.

I made a note of this curious thing, as showing in a striking manner the relative difference between glacial action and the action of the hog. It is now a well established fact, that glaciers move; I consider that my observations go to show, with equal con-clusiveness, that a hog in a spring does not move. I shall be gird to receive the opin-ions of other observers upon this point. To return, for an explanatory moment, to that guide, and then I shall be done with him. After leaving the ram tied to the rope, he had wanded at large a while, and then happened to run across a cow. Judging that a cow would naturally know more than a guide, he took her by the tail, and the result justified his judgment. She nibbled her leisurely way down hill till it was near milking time, then she struck for home and towed him into Zermatt.

ing was cold by character but the seld

to

pre

me

mo to i the 880 ext

508

8DO The que line

love

an i obs

val

ope

Alp

a pi CAU

ram

feet

'us gra one

oru

and

bet

imp

ne a hav

I

T

1

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

We went into camp on that wild spot to which that ram had brought us. The men were greatly fatigued. Their conviction that we were lost was forgotten in the cheer of a good supper, and before the reaction had a chance to set in, I loaded them up with paregoric and put them to bed.

Next morning I was considering in my mind our desperate situation and trying to think of a remedy, when Harris came to me with a Baedeker map which showed conclusively that the mountain we were on was still in Switzerland—yes, every part of it was in Switzerland. So we were not lost, after all. This was an immense relief; it lifted the weight of two such mountains from my breast. I immediately had the news disseminated, and the map exhibited. The effect was wonderful. As even as the men saw with their own eyes that they knew where they were, and that was only the summit that was lost and not themselves, they cheered up instantly and said with one accord. let the nummit take care of itself, they were not interested in its troubles.

Our distresses being at an end, I now determined to rest the men in camp and give the scientific department of the Exhibition a chance. First, I made a barometric observation, to get our altitude, but I could not perceive that there was any result. I knew, by my scientific reading, that either thermometers or harometers ought to be boiled, to make them securate: I did not know which it was, so boiled both. There was still no result; so a xamined these instruments and discovers that they possessed radical blemishes: the basemeter had no hand, but the brass pointer and the ball of the thermometer was stuffed with the foil. I might have boiled these things to rags, and never found out anything.

I hunted up another barometer; it was new and perfect. I boiled it half an hour in

) ą

does so the opinoment, te lone with the rope, and then Judging more than nd the ree nibbled WAS DOOR home and

ld spot to conviction the cheer action had n up with ring in my

d trying to came to me nowed comere on was part of it e not lost, e relief ; it ntains from ne news dis-. The effect e men saw know where he summit elves, they ith one soitself, they

I now denp and give Exhibition a ric observacould not t. I knew, either : therbe boiled. not know There was hese instruy possessed r had no the ball of th tin foil. to rags, and

ter; it was a pot of bean soup which the cooks were making. The result was unexpected : the instrument was not affected at all, but there was such a strong barometer taste to the soup that the head oor o who was a most soup that the head oo who was a most conscientious person, changed its name in the bill of fars. The dish was so greatly liked by all, that I ordered the cook to have barometer soup every day. It was believed that the barometer might eventually be injured, but I did not care for that. I had demonstrated to my estisfaction that it could not tell how high a mountain was therefore I had no real was for it. Change of the had no real use for it. Changes of the weather I could take care of without it; 1 did not wish to know when the weather was going to be good, what I wanted to know was when it was going to bad, and this I sould find out from Harris's corns. Harris had had his corns tested and regulated at the government observatory in Heidelberg, and one could depend upon them with confidence. So I transferred the new barometer to the cooking department, to be used for the official mess. It was found that even a pretty fair article of soup could be made with a defective barometer; so I allowed that one to be transferred to the subordinate messes.

I next boiled the thermometer, and got a most excellent result; the mercury went up to about 200° Fahrenheit. In the opinion of the other scientists of the Expedition, this seemed to indicate that we had attained the extraordinary altitude of 200,000 feet above sea level. Science places the line of eternal anow at about 10,000 feet above sea level. There was no snow where we were, consequently it was proven that the eternal snow line ceases somewhere above the 10,000 foot level and does not begin any more. This was an interesting fact, and one that had not been observed by any observer before. It was as valuable as interesting, too, since it would open up the deserted summits of the highest Alps to population and agriculture. It was a proud thing to be where we seem, yet it caused us a many to redect that but for that ram we might just as well have been 200,000 feet higher.

This success of my last experiment in-Juved me to try an experiment of my photographic apparatus. I got it out, and boiled one of my cameras, but the thing was a failure : it made the wood swell up and burst, and I could not see that the lenses were any better than they were before.

I now concluded to boil a guide. It might improve him, it could not impair his usefulne . But I was not allowed to proceed. Guides have no feeling for science, and this one would not consent to be made uncomfortable in its intere its interest.

In the midst of my selectific work, one of those needless accidents happened which are always occurring among the ignorant and thoughtless. A porter shot at a chamois and missed it and orippled the Latinist. This was not a serious matter to me, for a Latinist's duties are as well performed on orutches as otherwise,—but the fact remain-ed that if the Latinist had not happened to be in the way a mule would have got that load. That would have been quite another matter, for when it comes down to a question of value there is a palpable difference be-tween a Latinist and a mule. I could not depend on having a Latinist in the right place every time; so, to make things safe, I ordered that in future the chamois must not be hunted within the limits of the camp with any other weapon than the foreinger.

My nerves had hardly grown quiet after this affair when they got another scrape-up, one which utterly unmanned me for a moment: a rumour swept suddenly through the camp that one of the barkeepere had fallen over a precipice!

However it turned out that it was only a chaplain. I had laid in an extra force of chaplains, purposely to be prepared for emergencies like this, and by some unaccountable oversight had come away rather shorthanded in the matter of barkeepers.

On the following morning we moved on, well refreshed and in good spirits. I remember this day with peculiar pleasure, because it saw our road restored to us. Yes, we found our road again, and in quite an extraordinary way. We had plodded along some two hours and a half, when we came up against a solid mass of rock about twenty feet high. I did not need to be instructed by a mule this time.—I was already beginuing to know more than any mule in the expedition. - I at once put in a blast of dynainite, and lifted that rock out of the way. But to my surprise and mortification, I found that there had been a chalet on top of it.

I picked up such members of the family as fell in my vicinity, and subordinates of my corps collected the rest. None of these poor people were injured, happily, but they were much annoyed. I explained to the head chaleteer just how the thing happened, and that I was only tearching for the road, and would certainly have given him timely notice if I had known he was up there. I said I had meant no harm, and hoped I had not lowered myself in his estimation by raising him a few rods in the air. I said many other judicious things, and finally when I offered to rebuild his chalet, and pay for breakages, and throw in the cellar, he was mollified and satisfied be hadn't any cellar at all before; he would not have as good a view now as fermerly, but what he had lost in view he had gained in cellar, by exact measurement. He said there wasn't another hole like that in the mountains-and he would have been right if the late mule had not tried to eat up the nitroglycerine.

I put a hundred and sixteen men at work, and they rebuilt the chalet from its own debris in fifteen minutes. It was a good deal more picturesque than it was before, too, The man said we were now on the Feli-Stats. above the Schwegmatt-information which I was glad to get, since it gave us our position based degree of particularity which we had not been accustomed to for a day or so. so learned that we were standing at the foot of the Riffelberg proper, and that the initial chapter of our work was completed.

We had a fine view, from here, of the energetic Visp, as it makes its first plunge into the world from under a huge arch of solid ice, worn through the foot wall of the great Gorner Glacier; and we could also see the Furggenbach, which is the outlet of the Furggen Glacier.

The mule-road to the summit of the Raffelberg passed right in front of the chalet, a circumstance which we almost immediately noticed, because a procession of tourists was tiling along it pretty much all the time". The chaleteer's business consisted in furnishing refreshments to tourists. My blast had interrupted this trade for a few minutes, by breaking all the bottles on the place; but I gave the man a lot of whiskey to sell for Alpine champagne, and a lot of vinegar which would answer for Rhine wine, coasequently trade was soon as brisk as ever.

Leaving the expedition outside to rest, I quartered myself in the chalet, with Harris, purposing to correct my journals and scientific observations before continuing the ascent. I had hardly begun my work when a tall, slender, vigorous American youth of about twenty-three, who was on his way down the mountain, entered and came toward me with that breezy self-complacency which is the adolescent s idea of the well-bred case of the man of the world. His hair was short and parted accurately in the middle, and he had all the look of an American person who would be likely to begin his signature with an initial, and spell his mid-dle name out. He introduced himself, smiling a smirky smile borrowed from the courtier of the stage, extended a fair-skinned talon, and whilst he gripped my hand in it he bent his body forward three times at the hips, as the stage-courier does, and said in the airiest and most condescending and patronizing way—I quote his exact language.

"Very glad to make your acquaintance, 'm sure ; very glad indeed, assure you, I've read all your little efforts and greatly admired them, and when I heard you

I indicated a chair, and he sat down. This grandee was the grandson of an 'American of considerable note in his day, and not wholly forgotten yet—a man who came so near being a great man that he was quite generally accounted one while he lived.

I slowly paced the floor, pondering scientific problems, and heard this conversation:-Grandson. First visit to Europe? Harris. Mine? Yes.

DO O O W DYPDI W O M II

Wittb

G. S. (With a soft reminiscent sigh suggestive of by gone joys that may be tasted in their freshness but once.) Ah, I know what it is to you. A first visit!—ah, the romance of it! I wish I could feel it again.

H. Yes, I find it exceeds all my dreams. It is enchantment. I go-

G. S. (With a dainty gesture of the hand signifying, 'Spare me your callow enthusiasms, good friend.') Yes, I know, I know; you go to cathedrals, and exclaim; and you orag through league-long picture galleries and exclaim; and you stand here, and there, and yonder, upon historic ground, and continue to exclaim; and you are permeated with your first crude conceptions of art, and are proud and happy. Ah. yes, proud and happy —that expresses it Yes-yes, enjoy it—it is right—it is an innocent revel.

H. And you? Don't you de these things

G. S. 11 O, that is very good! My dear sir, when you are as old a traveller as I am, you will not ask such a question as that. I visit the regulation gallery, moon around the regulation cathedral, do the worn round of the regulation sights, yet ?-Excuse me !

Well, what do you do, then ? G. S. Do? I flit-and flit-for I am ever on the wing-but I avoid the herd. To-day I am in Paris, to morrow in Berlin, anon in Rome; but you would look for me in vain in the galleries of the Louvre or the common resorts of the gazers in those other capitals. If you would find me, you must look in the unvisited nooks and corners where others never think of going. One day you will find me making myself at home in some ebscure peasant's cabin, another day you will find me in some forgotten castle worshipping some little gem of art which the careless eye <sup>*&#</sup>x27;Pretty much' may not be elegant English, but it is high time it was. There is no elegant word or parase which means just what it means.—M. T.

ir-skinned hand in it mes at the d said in ding and language. acquaintssure you, forts and heard you own. This merican of not wholly near being erally acing scienersation:-

sigh sugbe tasted h, I know !-ah, the lit again. y dreams.

of the hand ow enthu-w, l know; 1; and you e galleries and there, and contineated with t, and are and happy oy it-it is

hese things

good! My on as that. on around worn round kcuse me !

r I am ever . To-day n, anon in in vain in e common er capitals. ook in the ere others u will find ae ebscure will find orehipping areless eye kd

has overlooked and which the unexperienced would despise; again you will find me a guest in the inner sanctuaries of palaces while the herd is content to get a hurried glimpse of the unused chambers by feeing a servant.

H. You are a guest in such places?

G. S. And a welcome one.

H. It is surprising. How does it come?
G. S. My grandfather's name is a passport to all the courts in Europe. I have only to utter that name and every door is open to me. I flit from court to court at my own free will and pleasure, and am always welcome, I am as much at home in the palaces of Europe as you are among your relatives. I know every titled person in Europe, I think. I have my Pockets full of invitations all the time.

I am under promise now, to go to Italy, where I am to be the guest of a succession of the noblest houses in the land. In Berlin my life is a continued round of gayety at the imperial palace. It is the same, wherever I

It must be very pleasant. But it must make Boston seem a little slow when you are at home.

G. S. Yes, of course it does. But I don't go home much. There's no life there -little to feed a man's higher nature. Boston's very narrow, you know. She doesn't know it, and you couldn't convince her of it -so I say nothing when I'm there: where's the use? Yes, Boston is very narrow, but she has such a good opinion of herself that she can't see it. A man who has travelled as much as I have, and seen as much of the world, sees it plain enough, but he can't cure it, you know; so the best way is to leave it and seek a sphere which is more in harmony with his tastes and culture. I run across there, once a year, perhaps, when I have nothing important on hand, but I'm very soon back again. I spend my time in Europe. H. I see. You map out your plans and

G. S. No, excuse me. I don't map out any plans. I simply follow the inclination of the day. I am limited by no ties, no requirements, I am not bound in any way. am too old a traveller to hamper myself with deliberate purposes. I am simply a traveller —an inveterate traveller—a man of the world, in a word—I can call myself by no other name. I do not say, 'I am going here, or I am going there'—I say nothing at all, I only act. For instance, next week you may find me the guest of a grandee of Spain, or you may find me off for Venice, or. flitting toward Dreaden. I shall probably go to Egypt presently; friends will say to friends, 'He is at the Nile cataracts'—and at that very moment they will be surprised to learn that I'm away off yonder in India somewhere. I am a constant surprise to people. They are always saying, 'Yes, he was in Jerusalem when we heard of him last. but goodness knows where he is now.'

Presently the Grandson rose to leavediscovered he had an appointment with some Emperor, perhaps. He did his graces over again: gripped me with one talon, at arm's length, pressed his hat against his stomach with the other, bent his body in the middle three times, murmuring,— 'Pleasure, 'm sure; great pleasure, 'm sure. Wish you much success.'

Then he removed his gracious presence. It is a great and solemn thing to have a grandfather.

I have not purposed to misrepresent this boy in any way, for what little indignation he excited in me soon passed and left nothing behind it but compassion. 'One cannot keep up a grudge against a vacuum. I have tried to repeat the lad's very words; if I have failed anywhere I have at least not failed to reproduce the marrow and meaning of what he said. He and the innocent chatterbox whom I met on the Swiss lake are the most unique and interesting specimens of Young America I came across during my foreign tramping. I have made honest portraits of them, not caricatures. Grandson of twenty-three referred to himself five or six times as an 'old traveler,' and as (with three times, serene complacency which was mad-dening) as a man of the world. There was something very delicious about his leaving Boston to her "narrowness," unreproved and uninstructed.

I formed the caravan in marching order, presently, and after riding down the line to see that it was properly roped together, gave the command to proceed. In a little while the road carried us to open, grassy land. We were above the troublesome forest, now, and had an uninterrupted view, straight before us, of our summit—the summit of the

Riffelberg

We followed the mule road, a zigzag course, now to the right, now to the left, but always up, and always crowded and incommoded by going and coming files of reck-less tourists who were never, in a single instance, tied together. I was obliged to exert the utmost care and caution, for in many places the road was not two yards wide, and often the lower side of it sloped away in slanting precipices eight and even nine feet deep. I had to encourage the men constantly, to keep them from giving way to their unmanly fears.

We might have made the summit before night, but for a delay caused by the loss of an umbrella. I was for allowing the umbrella to remain lost, but the men murmured, and with reason, for in this exposed region we stood in need of protection against avalanches; so I went into camp and detached a strong party to go after the missing article.

The difficulties of the next morning were severe, but our courage was high, for our goal was near. At noon we conquered the last impediment—we stood at last upon the summit, and without the loss of a single man except the mule that ate the glycerine. Our great achievement was achieved-the possibility of the impossible was demonstrated, and Harris and I walked proudly into the great dining-room of the Riffelberg Hotel and stood our alpenstocks up in the

Yes. I had made the grand ascent; but it was a mistake to do it in evening dress. The plug hats were battered, the swallow-tails were fluttering rags, mnd added no grace, the general effect was unpleasant and even disreputable.

There were about seventy-five tourists at the hotel-mainly ladies and little children —and they gave us an admiring welcome which paid us for all our privations and sufferings. The ascent had been made, and the names and dates now stand recorded on s stone monument there to prove it to all future touriste. I boiled a thermometer and took an altitude, with a most curious result: the summit was not as high as the point on the mountain side where I had taken the first alticude. Suspecting that I had made an important discovery, I prepared to verify it. There happened to be a still higher summit (called the Gorner Grat), above the hotel, and notwithstanding the fact that it overlooks a glacier from a dizzy height, and that the ascent is difficult and dangerous, I resolved to venture up there and boil a thermometer. So I sent a strong party, with some borrowed hoes, in charge of two chiefs of service, to dig a stairway in the soil all the way, and this I ascended, roped to the guides. This breezy height was the summit proper—so I accomplished even more than I had originally purposed to do. This fool-hardy exploit is recorded on another stone monument.

I boiled my thermometer, and sure enough this spot, which purported to be 2,000 feet higher than the locality of the hotel, turned out to be 9,000 feet lower. Thus the fact was clearly demonstrated, that, about a certain point, the higher a point seems to be, the lower it actually is. Our ascent itself was a great achievement, but this contribution to science was an inconceivably greater matter.

Cavilers object that water boils at a lower and lower temperature the higher and higher you go, and thence the apparent anomaly. I answer that I do not base my theory upon what the boiling water does, but upon what a boiled thermometer saps. You can't go behind the thermometer.

WOL

hav with kno

8000

hav dist thir

hi

abo

sun

and

one

ers

is

mo

I had a magnificent view of Monte Rosa, and apparently all the rest of the Alpine world, from that high place. All the circling horizon was piled high with a mighty One might have tumult of snowy crests. imagined he saw before him the tented camps of a beleaguering host of Brobdignag-

But lonely, conspicuous, and superb, rose that wonderful upright wedge, the Matterhorn. Its precipitous sides were powdered over with snow, and the upper half hidden in thick clouds which now and then dissolve to oobweb films and gave brief glimpses of the imposing tower as though a veil. A little later the Matterhorn took to himself the semblance of a volcano; he was stripped naked to his apex-around this oircled vast wreaths of white cloud which strung slowly out and streamed away slantwise toward the sun, a twenty-mile stretch of rolling and tumbling vapour, and looking just as if it were pouring out of a crater. Later again, one of the mountain's sides was clean and clear, and another side densely clothed from base to summit in thick smokelike cloud which feathered off and blew around the shaft's sharp edge like the smoke around the corner of a burning building. The Matterhorn is always experimenting, and always gets up fine effects, too. In the sunset, when all the lower world is palled in gloom, it points toward neaven out of the pervading blackness like a finger of fire. In the sunrise-well, they say it is very fine in

Authorities agree that there is no such tremendous 'lay out of snowy Alpine magnitude, grandeur and sublimity to be seen from any other accessible point, as the tourist may see from the summit of the Riffelberg.

Nore—I had the very unusual luck to catch one little momentary glimuse of the Matierhorn wholly unencumbered by clouds. I leveled my photogrophic apparatus at it without the loss of an instant, and should have got an elegant picture if my donkey had not interfered. It was my purpose to draw this photograph all by myself for my book, but was obliged to put the mountain part of it into the hands of the professional artist, because I found I could not do landscape well.

ent itself contribunceivably at a lower and higher nomaly. I eory upon ipon what u can't go nte Ross. he Alpine ll the cira mighty ight have he tented obdignag-perb, rose

e Matter-

powdered

if hidden and then zave brief though a n took to o; he was ound this nd which way slantd looking a crater. sides was le denselv ck smokeand blew the smoke building. imenting, o. In the palled in ut of the f fire. In ery fine in no such pine mago be seen the tourist iffelberg. to catch e Matter e. I levele. I level-rithout the rot an eleinterfered. ograph all ged to put nds of the could not Therefore, let the tourist rope himself up and go there; for I have shown that with nerve, cantion, and judgment, the thing can be done.

I wish to add one remark, here, -in parenthesis, so to speak,—suggested by the word 'snowy,' which I have just used. We have all seen hills and mountains and levels with snow on them, and so we think we know all the aspects and effects produced by snow. But indeed we do not, until we have seen the Alps. Possibly mass and distance add something,—at any rate something is added. Among other noticeable things, there is a dazzling, intense whiteness about the distant Alpine snow, when the sun is on it, which one recognizes as peculiar, and not familiar to the eye. The snow which one is accustomed to, has a tint to it,—painters usually give it a bluish cast,—but there is no perceptible tint to the distant Alpine snow when it is trying to look its whitest. As to the unimaginable splendour of it when the sun is blazing down on it, -well, it simply is unimaginable.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

A guide book is a queer thing. reader has just seen what a man who undertakes the great ascent from Zermatt to the Riffelberg hotel must experience. Yet Baedeker makes these strange statements concerning this matter:

Distance, —3 hours.
 The road cannot be mistaken.

3. Guide unnecessary

4. Distance from Riffelberg hotel to the Gorner Grat, one hour and a half.

5. Ascent simple and easy. Guide unnecessary.

6. Elevation of Zermatt above sea level, 5,315 feet.

7. Elevation of Riffelberg hotel above sea level, 8,429 feet.

8. Elevation of the Gorner Grat above sea level, 10,489 feet.

I have pretty effectually throttled these errors by sending him the following demonstrated lacts :

1. Distance from Zermatt to Riffelberg hotel, 7 days.

2. The road can be mistaken. If iI am the first that did it, I want the credit of it, too.

3. Guides are necessary, for none but a native can read those tinger-boards. 4. The estimate of the elevation of the localities above sea level is pretty correct — for Baedeker. He only misses it about a hundred and eighty or ninety thousand feet.

I found my arnice invaluable. My men were suffering exeruciatingly, from the friction of sitting down so much. During two or three days, not one of them was able to do more than lie down or walk about; yet so effective was the arnica, that on the fourth all were able to ait up. I consider, that, more than anything else, I owe the success of our great undertaking to arnica and paregorio.

My men being restored to health and strength, my main perplexity, now, was how to get them down the mountain again. I was not willing to expose the brave fellows to the perils, fatigues, and hardships of that fearful route again if it could be helped. First I thought of balloons; but of course I had to give that idea up, for balloons were not procurable. I thought of several other expedients, but upon consideration discarded them, for cause. But at last I hit it. was aware that the movement of glaciers is an established fact, for I had read it in Baedeker; so I resolved to take passage for.

Zermatt on the great Gorner Glacier.

Very good. The next thing was, how to get down to the glacier comfortably—for the mule-road to it was long and winding, and wearisome. I set my mind at work, and soon thought out a plan. One looks straight down upon the vast frozen river called the Gorner Glacier, from the Gorner Grat, a sheer precipice 12,000 feet high. We had 154 umbrellas-and what is an umbrella buta parachute?

I mentioned this noble idea to Harris, with enthusiasm, and was about to order the Expedition to form on the Gorner Grat, with their umbrellas, and prepare for flight by platoons, each platoon in command of a guide, when Harris stopped me and urged me not to be too hasty. He asked me if this method of descending the Alps had ever been tried before. I said no, I had not heard of an instance. Then in his opinion it would not be well to send the whole command over the cliff at once; a better way would be to send down a single individual, first, and see how he fared.

I saw the wisdom of this idea instantly. I said as much, and thanked my agent cordially, and told him to take his umbrella and try the thing right away, and wave his hat when he got down, if he struck in a soft place, and then I would ship the rest right

Harris was greatly touched with this mark of confidence, and said so, in a voice that had a perceptible tremble in it; but at the same time he said he did not feel him-self worthy of so conspicuous a favour; that it might cause jealousy in the command, for there were plenty who would not hesitate to say he had used underhand means to get the appointment, whereas his conscience would bear him witness that he had not sought it at all, not even, in his secret heart, desired it.

I said these words did him extreme oredit, but that he must not throw away the imperishable distinction of being the first man to descend an Alp per parachute, simply to save the feelings of some envious underlings. No, I said, he must accept the appointment,—it was no longer an invitation, it was a command.

He thanked me with effusion, and said that putting the thing in this form removed every objection. He retired, and soon returned with his umbrella, his eyes flaming with gratitude and his cheeks pallid with joy. Just then the head guide passed along. Harris's expression changed to one of infinite tenderness, and he said—

'That man did me a cruel injury four days ago, and I said in my heart he should live to perceive and confess that the only noble revenge a man can take upon his enemy is to return good for evil. I resign in his favour Appoint him.'—

I threw my arms around the generous fellow and said—

'Harris, you are the noblest soul that lives. You shall not regret this sublime act, neither shall the world fail to know of it.
You shall have opportunities for transcending this one, too, if I live—remember that.'

I called the head guide to me and appointed him on the spot. But the thing aroused no enthusiasm in him. He did not take to the idea at all. He said—

'Tie myself to an umbrella and jump over the Gorner Grat! Excuse me, there are a great many pleasanter roads to the devil than that.'

Upon a discussion of the subject with him, it appeared that he considered the project distinctly and decidedly dangerous. I was not convinced, yet I was not willing to try the experiment in any risky way—that is, in a way that might cripple the strength and efficiency of the Expedition. I was about at my wits' end when it occurred to me to try it on the Latinist.

He was called in. But he declined, on the plea of inexperience, diffidence in public, lack of curiosity, and I don't know what all. Another man declined on account of a cold in the head; thought he ought to avoid exposure. Another could not jump well—never could jump well—did not believe he could jump so far without long and patient practice. Another was afraid it was going to rain, and his umbrella had a hole in it.

Everybody had an excuse. The result was what the reader has by this time guessed: the most magnificent idea that was ever-conceived had to be abandoned, from sheer lack of a person with enterprise enough to carry it out. Yes, I actually had to give that thing up—whilst doubtless I should live to see somebody use it and take all the credit from me.

Well, I had to go overland—there was no other way. I marched the Expedition down the steep and tedious mule path and took up as good a position as I could upon the middle of the Glacier—because Bacedeker said the middle part travels the fastest. As a measure of economy, however, I put some of the heavier baggage on the shoreward parts, to go as slow freight.

I waited and waited, but the Glacier did.

I waited and waited, but the Glacier did not move. Night was coming on, the darkness began to gather—still we did not budge. It occurred to me then, that there might be a time-table in Baedeker; it would be well to find out the hours of starting. I called for the book—it could not be found. Bradshaw would certainly contain a time-table; but no Bradshaw could be found.

Very well, I must make the best of the situation. So I pitched the tents, picketed the animals, milked the cows, had supper, paregorized the men, established the watch, and went to bed—with orders to call me as soon as we came in sight of Zermatt.

I awoke about half past sen, next morning, and looked around. We hadn't budged a peg! At first I could not understand it; then it occurred to me that the old thing must be aground. So I cut down some trees and rigged a spar on the starboard and another on the port side, and fooled away upwards of three hours trying to spar her off. But it was no use. She was half a mile wide and fifteen or twenty miles long, and there was no telling just whereabouts she was aground. The men began to show uneasiness, too, and presently they came flying to me with ashy faces, saying she had sprung a leak.

Nothing but my cool behaviour at this critical time saved us from another panic. I ordered them to show me the place. They led me to a spot where a huge bowlder lay in a deep pool of clear and brilliant water. It did look like a pretty bad leak, but I kept that to myself. I made a pump and set the men to pump out the glacier. We made a success of it. I perceived, then, that it was not a leak at all. This bowlder had descended from a precipice and stopped on the ice in the middle of the glacier, and the sun had warmed it up, every day, and consequently it had melted its way deeper and aum comiunti with An year am

man

dee

oles

I h

WA

Was

fact

goo

DAS

joyi

tha

the four

and acro

rup

thre

AVOI

day.

have

betr

inch

dist

quir hun

wall

such

Pass

part

P

said the thir but vat muc I w

> tor; diff

it.
I the

lt was ossed: I OVET aheer ngh to o give all the

was ne n down took up he mider said As a some of d parts, cier did ne darkbudge. night be be well I called Brade-table;

st of the picketed supper, e watch, all me as morning, budged a derstand that the o I out spar on ort side. ours tryise. She r twenty ling just The men presently aces, say-

r at this panic. e. They der lay in vater. ak, but I p and set We made n, that it rhad de. ed on the i the sun and coneeper and deeper into the ice, until at last it reposed, as we had found it, in a deep pool of the clearest and coldest water.

Presently Baccker was found again, and I hunted eagerly for the time-table. There was none. The book simply said the glacier was moving all the time. This was satisfactory, so I shut up the book and chose a good position to view the scenery as we passed along. I stood there some time enjoying the trip, but at last it occurred to me that we did not seem to be gaining any on the scenery. I said to myself, 'This con-founded old thing's aground again, sure'— and opened Baedeker to see if I could run across any remedy for these annoying inter-ruptions. I soon found a sentence which threw a dazzling light upon the matter. It said, 'The Gorner Glacier travels at an average rate of a little less than an inch a day.' I have seldom felt so outraged. I have seldom had my confidence so wantonly betrayed. . I made a small calculation: 1 inch a day, say 30 feet a year; estimated distance to Zermatt, 3 1-18 miles. Time required to go by glacier, a little over five hundred years! I said to myself, 'I can walk it quicker—and before I will patronize such a fraud as this, I will do it.' When I revealed to Harris the fact that the passenger part of this glacier—the central part—the lightning express part, so to speak—was not due in Zermatt till the summer of 2378, and that the baggage, coming along the slow edge, would not arrive until some generations later, he, burst out

That is European management, all over ! An inch a day-think of that! Five hundred years to go a trifle over three miles ! But I am not a bit surprised. It's a Catholic glacier. You can tell by the look of it. And the management.

I said, no, I believed nothing but the extreme end of it was in a Catholic canton.

'Well, then, it's a government glacier,' said Harris. 'It's all the same. Over here the government runs everything—so everything's slow; slow, and ill managed. but with us, everything's done by private enterprise—and then there ain't much lolling around, you can depend on it. I wish Tom Scott could get his hands on this torpid old slab once—you'd see it take a different gait from this.'

I said I was sure he would increase the speed, if there was trade enough to justify

He'd make trade,' said Harris. 'That's the difference between governments and indi-viduals. Governments don't care, individu-the great Gorner Glacier, and here we als do. From Scott would take all the trade; camped, our perils over and our magnificent in two years Gorner stock would go to 200, and inside of two more you would see all the other glaciers under the hammer for taxes.' After a reflective pause, Harris added, 'A little less than an inch a day;' a little less than an inch, mind you. Well, little less than an inch, mind you. I'm losing my reverence for glaciers.'

I was feeling much the same way myself. I have travelled by canal boat, ox waggon, raft, and by the Ephesus and Smyrna railway; but when it comes down to good solid honest slow motion, I bet my money on the glacier. As a means of passenger trans-portation, I consider the glacier a failure; but as a vehicle forslow freight, I think she fills the bill. In the matter of putting the fine shades on that line of business, I judge she could teach the Germans something.

I ordered the men to break camp and prepare for the land journey to Zermatt. At this mement a most interesting find was made; a dark object, bedded in the glacial ice, was cut out with the ice-axes, and it was proved to be a piece of the undressed skin of some animal—a hair trunk, perhaps; but a close inspection disabled the hair trunk theory-and further discussion and examination exploded it entirely—that is, in the opinion of all the scientists except the one who had advanced it. This one clung to his theory with the affectionate fidelity characteristic of originators of scientific theories, and afterwards won many of the first scientists of the age to his view, by a very able pamphlet which he wrote, entitled, Evidences going to show that the hair trunk, in a wild state, belonged to the early glacial period, and roamed the wastes of chaos in company with the cave bear, primeval man, and the other Oolities of the old Silurian family.

Each of our scientists had a theory of his own, and put forward an animal of his own as a candidate for the skin. I sided with the geologist of the expedition in the belief that this patch of skin had once helped to cover a Siberian elephant, in some old forgotten age-but we divided there, the geologist believing that this discovery proved that Siberia had formerly been located where Switzerland is now, whereas I held the opinion that it merely proved that the primeval Swiss was not the dull savage he is represented to have been, but was a being of high intellectual devolopment, who liked to go to the menagerie. We arrived that evening, after many hardships and adventures, in some fields close to the great ice-arch where the mad Visp undertaking successfully completed. marched into Zermatt the next day, and were received with the most lavished honours and applause. A document, signed and sealed by all the auth rities, was given to me which established and endorsed the fact that I had made the ascent of the Riffelberg. This I wear around my neck, and is will be buried with me when I am no

CHAPTER XL.

I am not so ignorant about glacial movement, now, as I was when I took passage on the Gorner Glacier. I have 'read up,' since. I am aware that these vast bodies of ice do not travel at the same rate of speed : whilst the Gorner Glacier makes less than au inch a day, the Unter-Aar Glacier makes as much as eight; and still other glaciers are said to go twelve, sixteen, and even twenty inches a day. One writer says that the slowest glacier travels 25 feet a year, and the fastest 400.

What is a glacier? It is easy to say t looks likes frozen river which octhe bed of awinding gorge or deep gully between mountains. But that gives no notion of its vastness. For it is sometimes 600 feet thick, and we are not accustomed to rivers 600 feet deep; no, our rivers are 6 feet, 20 feet, and sometimes 50 feet deep; we are not quite able to grasp so large a fact as an ice-river 600 feet deep.

The glacier's surface is not smooth and level, but has deep swales and swelling elevations, and sometimes has the look of a tossing sea whose turbulent billows were frozen hard in the instant of their most violent motion; the glacier's surface is not a flawless mass, but is a river with cracks or crevices, some narrow, some gaping wide. Many a man, the victim of a slip or a misstep, has plunged down one of these and met his death. Men have been fished out of them alive, but it was when they did not go to a great depth; the cold of the great depths would quickly stupe. fy a man, whether he was hurt or unhurt. These cracks do not go straight down ; one can seldom see more than twenty to forty feet down them; consequently men who have disappeared in them have been sought for, in the hope that they had stopped within helping distance, whereas their case, in most instances, had really been hopeless from the beginning.

In 1864 a party of tourists was descending Mont Blanc, and while picking their way over one of the mighty glaciers of that lefty region, roped together, as was proper, a young porter disengaged himself from the line and started across an ice-bridge which spanned a crevice. It broke under him with a crash, and he disappeared. The others could not see how deep he had gone, so it might be worth while to try and rescue him.

A brave young guide named Michael Payot volunteered Two ropes were made fast to his belt and he bore the end of a third one in his hand to tie to the victim in case he found him. He was lowered into the crevice, he descended deeper and deeper between the clear blue walls of solid ice, he approached a bend in the crack and disappeared under it. Down, and still down he went, into this profound grave; when he had reached a depth of 80 feet he passed under another bend in the crack, and thence descended 80 feet lower, as between perpendicular precipices. Arrived at this stage of 160 feet below the surface of the glacier, he peered through the twilight dimness and perceived that the chasm took another turn and stretched away at a deep slant to unknown deeps, for its course was lost in darkness. What a place that was to be in—especially if that leather belt should break! The compression of the belt threatened to suffocate the intrepid fellow; he called to his friends to draw him up but could not make them hear. They still lowered him, deeper and deeper. Then he jerked his third cord as vigorously as he could; his friends understood, and dragged him out of those icy jaws of death.

Then they attached a bottle to a cord and aho:

whi

Ivri

dip

left

mile

heig thir

The

Dus

At . the

at I

tha

of a

oles

oble

hna

com it, s

into plai

whi

digi

tanc

deri

sum

feet

cupi

pro

cha

spec refe

172

mo

fort

(eit

ear

80q

froi

the

dig

dis

spa

enc

mil

in

lan

lat

Wa

lan

G

I

sent it down 200 feet, but it found no bottom.

It came up covered with congelationsevidence enough that even if the poor porter reached the bottom with unbroken bones, a swift death from cold was sure, anyway.

A glacier is a stupendous, ever progressing, resistless plow. It pushes ahead of it masses of bowlders which are packed together, and they stretch across the gorge, right in front of it, like a long grave or a long, sharp roof. This is called a moraine. It also shoves out a moraine along each side of its course.

Imposing as the modern glaciers are, they are not so huge as were some that once For instance, Mr. existed. Whymper says:

'At some very remote period the Valley of Aosta was occupied by a vast glacier, which flowed down its entire length from Mont Blanc to the plain of Peidmont, remained stationary, or nearly so, at its mouth for many centuries. and deposited there en. ormous masses of debris. The length o this glacier exceeded eighty miles, and i drained a basin 25 to 35 miles across, bound ed by the highest mountains in the Alps The great peaks rose several thousand fee above the glaciers, and then, as now, shat tered by sun and frost, poured down their showers of rocks and atones, in witness of which there are the immense piles of angular fragments that constitute the moraines of Ivria.

ge which him with others

ne, so it

cue him.

ast to his

he found svice, he ween the roached a under it.

this pro-

d a depth

r bend in recipices.

below the

rough the

that the hed away

eps, for its at a place nat leather

sion of the

trepid fel-

w him up,

They still Then he

usly as he

id dragged

a cord and no bottom.

gelations-

poor porter

n bones, a

of it masses

gether, and

ght in front

sharp roof.

shoves out

that once Whymper

the Valley

ast glacier, length from idmont, re-

at its mouth ad there en_

e length o

niles, and i

in the Alps

oneand fee

s now, shat

W

yway. progressing,

ourse. ers are, they The moraines around Ivria are of extraordinary dimensions. That which was on the left bank of the glacier is about thirteen miles long, and in some places rises to a height of two thousand one hundred and thirty feet above the floor of the valley! The terminal moraines (those which are pushed in front of the glaciers), cover something like twenty square miles of country. At the mouth of the Valley of the Aosta, the thickness of the glacier must have been at least two thousand feet, and its width, at that nart, five miles and a quarter.'

that part, five miles and a quarter.'

It is not easy to get at a comprehension of a mass of nee like that. If one could cleave off the butt end of such a glacker—an oblong block two or three miles wide by five and aquarter long and 2,000 feet thick he could completely hide the city of New York under it, and Trinity steeple would only stick up into it relatively as far as a shingle nail world stick up into the bottom of a Saratoga trunk.

The boulders from Mont Blane, upon the plain below Ivria, assures us that the glacier which transported them existed for a prodigious length of time. Their present distance from the cliffs from which they were derived is about 420,000 feet, and if we assume that they travelled at the rate of 400 feet per annum, their journey must have occupied them no less than 1,055 years. In all probability they did not travel so fast.

Glaciers are sometimes hurried out of their characteristic snail pace. A marvellous spectacle is presented then. Mr. Whymper refers to a case which occurred in Iceland in 1991.

It seems that in the neighbourhood of the mountain Kotlugja, large bodies of water formed underneath, or within the glaciers (either on acount of the interior heat of the earth, or from other causes), and at length acquired irresistible power, tore the glaciers from their mooring on the land, and ewept them over every obstacle into the sea. Prodigious masses of ice were thus borne for a distance of about ten miles over land in the space of a few hoprs; and their bulk was so enormous that they covered the sea for seven miles from the shore, and remained aground in 600 feet of water ! The denudation of the All accumu. land was upon a grand scale. lations were swept away and the bed rock was exposed. It was described in graphic language how all irregularities and depressions were obliterated, and a smooth surface of several miles area laid bare, and that this area had the appearance of having been planed by a plane.

The account translated from the Icelandic says that the mountain-like ruins of this majestic glacier so covered the sea that as far as the eye could reach no water was discoverable, even from the highest peaks. A monater wall or barrier of ice was built across a considerable stretch of land, too, by this strange irruption:

One can form some idea of the altitude of this barrier of ice when it is mentioned that from Hofdabrekka farm, which lies high up on a field, one could not see Hjorleifshofdi opposite, which is a fall 640 feet in height; but in order to do so had to clamber up a mountain slope east of Hofdabrekka 1,200 feet high.

These things will help the reader to understand why it is that a man who keeps company with glaciers comes to feel tolerably insignificant by and by. The Alps and the glaciers together are able to take every bit of conceit out of a man and reduce his self-importance to zero if he will only remain within the influence of their sublime presence long enough to give it a fair and reasonable chance to do its work.

The Alpine glaciers move—that is granted now by everybody. But there was a time when people scoffed at the idea; they say you might as well expect leagues of solid rock to crawl along the ground as expect solid leagues of ice to do it. But proof after proof was furnished, and finally the world had to believe.

The wise men not only said the glacier moved, but they timed its movement. They ciphered out a glacier's gait, and then said confidently that it would travel just so far in so many years. There is record of a striking and curious example of the accuracy which may be obtained in these reckonings.

In 1820 the ascent of Mont Blane was attempted by a Russian and two Englishmen, with seven guides. They had reached a prodigious altitude, and were approaching the summit, when an avalanche swept several of the party down a sharp slope of two hundred feet and hurled five of them (all guides,) into one of the crevices of a glacier. The life of one of the five was saved by a long barometer which was strapped to his back—it bridged the crevice and suspended him until help came. The alpenstock or baton of another saved its owner in a similar way. Three men were lost—Pierre Balmat, Pierre Carrier, and Auguste Tairraz. They had been hurled down into the fathomless great deeps of the crevice.

Dr. Forbes, the English geologist, had made frequent visits to the MontBlanc region and had given much attention to the disputed question of the movements of glaciers. During one of these visits he completed his estimates of the rate of movement of the glacier which had swallowed up the three guides, and uttered the prediction that the glacier would deliver up its dead at the foot of the mountain thirty-five years from the time of the accident, or possibly forty.

A dull, slow journey - a movement imperceptible to any eye—but it was proceeding, nevertheless, and without cessation. It was a journey which a rolling stone would make in a tew seconds—the lofty point of departure was visible from the village below in the valley.

The prediction out curiously close to the truth; forty-one years after the catastrophe, the remains were cast forth at the foot of the glacier.

I find an interesting account of the matter in the "Histoire du Mont Blanc, by Stephen d'Arve." I will condense this account, as follows:

On the 12th of August, 1861, at the hour of the close of mass, a guide arrived out of breath at the mairie of Chamonix, and bearing on his shoulders a very lugubrious burden. It was a sack filled with human remains which he had gathered from the orifice of a crevice in the Glacier des Bossons. He conjectured that these were remains of the viciens of the catastrophe of 1820, and a minute inquest, immediately instituted by the local authorities, soon demonstrated the correctuess of his supposition. The coutents of the sack were spread upon a long table, and officially inventoried, as follows:

Portions of three human skulls. Several tufts of black and blonde hair. A human jaw, furnished with fine white teeth. A forearm and hand, all the fingers of the latter intact. The fiesh was white and fresh, and both the arm and hand preserved a degree of flexibility in the articulations.

The ring-finger had suffered a slight abrasion, and the stain of the blood was still visible and unchanged after forty-one years. A left foot, the flesh white and fresh.

Along with these fragments were portions of waistocats, hats, hob nailed shoes and other clothing; a wing of a pigeon, with black feathers; a fragment of an alpenstock; a tin lantern; and lastly, a boiled leg of mutton, the only fiesh among all the remains that exhaled an unpleasant odour. The guide eaid that the mutton had no odour when he took it from the glacier; an hour's exposure to the sun had already begun the work of decomposition upon it.

Persons were called for, to identify these poor pathetic relies, and a touching scene ensued. Two men were still living who had witnessed the grim catastrophe of nearly half a century before,—Marie Couttet, (saved by his baton,) and Julien Davonassoux, (saved by the barometer). These aged men entered and approached the table. Davonassoux, more than eighty years old, contemplated the mournful remains mutely and with a vacant eye, /for his intelligence and his memory were torpid with age; but Couttet's faculties were still perfect at 72, and he exhibited strong emotion. He said,—

Pierre Balmat was fair; he were a straw

Pierre Balmat was fair; he wore a straw hat. This bit of skull, with the tute of blond hair, was his; this is his hat. Pierre Carrier was very dark; this skull was his, and this felt hat. This is Balmat's hend, I remember it so well, and the old man bent down and kissed it reverently, then closed his fingers upon it in an affectionate grasp, orying out, I could never have dared to believe that before quitting this world it would be granted me to press once more the hand of one of those brave comrades, the hand of my good friend Balmat,'

There is something weirdly pathetic about the picture of that white-haired veteran greeting with his loving hand shake this friend who had been dead forty years. When these hands had met last, they were like in the softness and freshness of youth; now, one was brown and wrinkled and horny with age, while the other was still as young and fair and blemishless as if those forty years had come and gone in a single moment, leaving no mark of their passage. Time had gone on, in one case; it had stood still in the other. A man who has not seen a friend for a generation, keeps him in mind always as he saw him last, and is somewhat sur-prised, and is also shooked, to see the aging change the years have wrought when he sees him again. Marie Conttet's experience, in finding his friend's hand unaltered from the image of it which he had carried in his memory for forty years, is an experience which stands alone in the history of man, perhaps.

Couttet identified other relics:

This hat b longed to Auguste Tairraz.
He carried the cage of pigeons which we propose to set free upon the summit. Here is the wing of one of those pigeons. And here is the fragment of my Broken baton; it was by grace of that baton that my life was saved. Who could have told me that I should one day have the satisfaction to look again upon this bit of wood that supported me above the grave that swallowed up my unfortunate companions !

No portions of the body of Tairraz had been found. A diligent search was made, but without result. However, another search hand tend weld The no trace of rosy This fore, count br

Was

whi

0 slee

offer

nix a
the d indiff neith
widow cordin
Four
found relati
don,
gentle
said—
'I

Cham
Y
H
three
A
V
Mr. 7

And in the can gwill of the odon any soun veye they coun from mine auta who had of nearly tet, (saved

rouaseoux,
aged men
Davouasl, contemutely and igence and j, but Coutat 72, and
said,—

the tute of tute of the tute of tu

thetic about ired veteran d-shake this When rears. were like in youth ; now, d horny with as young and e forty years gle moment, stood still in seen a friend mind always mewhat sursee the aging when he sees xperience, in ered from the d in his mem· man, perhaps.

a:
guste Tairrax.
which we promit. Here is
s. And here
baton; it was my life was sthat I should
to look again
supported me
red up my un-

erience which

irraz had bee i as made, but nother search was instituted a year later, and this had better success. Many fragments of clothing which had belonged to the lost guides were discovered; also, part of a lantern, and a green veil, with blood stains on it. But the interesting feature was this.

one of the searchers came suddenly upon a sleeved arm projecting from a crevice in the ice-wall, with the hand outstretched as if offering greeting! The nails of this white hand were still rosy, and the pose of the extended fingers seemed to express an eloquent welcome to the long lost light of day.

The hand and arm were alone; there was no trunk. After being removed from the ice (the flesh tints quickly faded out and the rosy nails took on the alabaster hue of death. This was the third right hand found: therefore, all three of the lost men were accounted for, beyond cavil or question.

Dr. Hamel was the Russian gentleman of the party which made the ascent at the time of the famous disaster. He left Chamenix as soon as he conveniently could after the descent; and as he had shown a chilly indifference about the calamity, and offered neither sympathy nor assistance to the widows and orphans, he carried with him the cordial execrations of the whole community. Four months before the first remains were found, a Chamonix guide named Balmat—a relative of one of the lost men—was in London, and one day encountered a hale old gentleman in the British museum, who said—

'I overheard your name. Are you from Chamonix, Monweur Balmat?'

'Yes, sir.'

Haven't they found the bodies of my three guides, yet? I am Dr. Hamel.

'Alas, no, monsieur.'

'Well, you'll find them, sooner or later.'

'Yes, it is the opinion of Dr. Forbes and Mr. Tyndal, that the glacier will sooner or later restore to us the remains of the unfortunate victims.'

'Without a doubt, without a doubt. And it will be a great thing for Chamonix, in the matter of attracting tourists. You can get up a museum with those remains that will draw!'

This savage idea has not improved the odour of Dr. Hamel's name in Chamonix by any means. But after all, the man was sound on human nature. His idea was conveyed to the public officials of Chamonix; and they gravely discussed it around the official council table. They were only prevented from carrying it into execution by the determined opposition of the friends and descendants of the lost guides, who insisted en giving the remains Christian burial and succeeded in their purpose.

A close watch had to be kept upon all the poor remnants and fragments, to prevent embesslement. A few accessory odds and ends were sold. Rags and sersps of the coarse clothing were parted with at a rate equal to about twenty dollars a yard; a piece of a lantern and one or two other trifles brought nearly their weight in gold; and an Englishman offered a pound sterling for a single breeches-button.

CHAPTER XLL

One of the most favourable of all the Alpine catastrophes was that of July, 1865, on the Matterhorn—already slightly referred to, a few pages back. The details of it are scarcely known in America. To the vast majority of readers they are not known at all. Mr. Whymper's account is the only authentic one. I will import the chief portion of it into this book, partly because of its intrinsic interest, and partly because it gives such a vivid idea of what the perilous pastime of Alp-climbing is. This was Mr. Whymper's ninth attempt during a series of years, to vanquish that steep and stubborn pillar of rock; it succeed, the other eight were failures. No man had ever accomplished the ascent before, though the attempts had been numerous.

MR. WHYMPER'S NARRATIVE.
We started from Zermatt on the 13th of July, at half-past five, on a brilliant and perfectly cloudless morning. We were eight in number—Croz (guide), old Peter Taugwalder (guide), and his two sons; Lord
F. Douglas, Mr. Hadow, Rev. Mr. Hudson, and I. To ensure steady motion, one tourist and one native walked together. The youngest Tangwalder fell to my share. The winebags also fell to my lot to carry, and throughout the day, after each drink, I replenished them secretly with water, so that at the next halt they were fuller than before! This was Omsidered a good omen, and little short of miraculous.

On the first day we did not intend to ascend to any great height, and we mounted, accordingly, very leisurely. Before 12 o'clock we had found a good position for the tent, at a height of 11,000 feet. We passed the remaining hours of daylight—some basked in the sunshine, some sketching, some collecting; Hudson made tea, I coffee, and at length we retired, each one to his blanket-bag.

We assembled together before dawn on the 14th and started directly it was light enough to move. One of the young Taugwalders.

returned to Zermatt. In a few minutes we turned the rib which had intercepted the view of the eartern face from our tent platform. The whole of this great elope was now revealed, rising for 3,000 feet like a huge natural staircase. Some parts were more, and others were less easy, but we were not once brought to a halt by any serious impediment, for when an obstruction was met in front it could always be turned to the right or to the left. For the greater part of the way there was no occasion, indeed, for the rope, and sometimes Hudeon led, sometimes myself. At 6.20 we had attained a height of 12,800 feet, and halted for half an hour; we then continued the ascent without a break natil 9.55, when we stopped for 50 minutes, until 9.55, when we stopped for 50 minutes, at a height of 14,000 feet. We had now arrived at the foot of thet part which, seen from the Riffelberg, seems perpendicular or overhanging. We could no longer continue on the eastern side. For a little distance we ascended by snow upon the arete—that is, the ride—then turned over to the right, or nothern side. The work became difficult, and required caution. In some places there was little to hold; the general slope of the mountain was less than 40°, and snow had accumulated in, and had filled up, the interstices of the rock-face, leaving only occasional fragments projecting here and there. These were at times covered with a thin film of ice. It was a place which any fair mountaineer might pass in safety. We bore away near horizontally for about 400 feet, then ascended directly toward the summit for about 60 feet, then doubled back to the ridge which descends toward Zermatt. A long stride round a rather awkward corner brought us to snow once more. The last doubt vanished! The Matterhorn was ours! Nothing but 200 feet of easy snow remained to be surmounted.

The higher we rose, the more intense became the excitement. The slope eased off, at length we could be detached, and Croz and I, dashing away, ran a neck-and-neck race, which ended in a dead heat. At 1, 40 pm., the world was at our feet, and the Matterborn was conquered!

The others arrived. Croz now took the tent pole, and planted it in the highest "how. 'Yes' we said, 'there is the flag taff, but where is the flag?' 'Here it is,' he answered, pulling off his blouse and fixing it to the stick. It made a poor flag, and there was no wind to float it out, yet it was seen all around. They saw it at Zermatt—at the Rieffel—in the Val Tournache.

We remained on the summit for one

'One crowded hour of glorious life.'
It passed away too quickly, and we began

Cido

W

jei he Ta

. 1

pa

to sig fel

M

m

the wo

giv

the

the

abl

do

ad

rop

me

tin

fal

the

all

bu

cor cri vin

sig les sile

lit

the

th hir

roj

to

th en tir Ta

to prepare for the descent.

Hudson and I consulted as to the best and safest arrangement of the party. : We agreed that it was best for Crox to go first, and Hadow second; Hudson, who was almost equal to a guide in sureness of foot, wished to be third; Lord Douglas was placed next, and old Peter, the strongest of the remainder. after him. I suggested to Hudson that we should attach a rope to the rocks on our arrival at the difficult bit, and hold it as we descended, as an additional protection. He approved the idea, but it was not definitely decided that it should be done. The party was being arranged in the above order whilet I was sketching the summit, and they had finished, and were waiting for me to be tied in line, when some one remembered that our names had not been left in a bottle. They requested me to write them down, and moved off while it was being done.

A few minutes afterwards I tied myself to young Peter, ran down after the others, and caught them just as they were commencing the descent of the difficult part. Great care was being taken. Only one man was moving at a time; when he was firmly planted the next advanced, and so on. They had not, however, attached the additional rope to rocks, and nothing was said about it. The suggestion was not made for my own sake. and I am not sure that it even occurred to me again. For some little distance we two followed the others, detached from them, and should have continued so had not Lord Douglas asked me, about 3 p.m., to tie on to old Peter, as he feared, he said, that Taugwalder would not be able to hold his ground if a slip occurred.

A few minutes later, a sharp-eyed lad ran into the Monte Rosa hotel, at Zermatt, saying that he had seen an alvanche fall from the summit of the Matterhorn on to the Matterhorn glacier. The boy was reproved for telling idle stories; he was right, nevertheless, and this was what we saw.

Michel Croz had laid aside his axe, and in order to give Mr. Hadow greater security, absolutely taking hold of his legs, and putting his feet, one by one, into their proper positions. As far as I know, no one was actually descending. I cannot speak with certainty, because the two leading men were partially hidden from my sight by an intervening mass of rock, but it is my belief, from the movements of their shoulders, that Croz, having done as I have said, was in the act of turning round to go down a step or two himself; at this moment Mr. Hadow slipped, fell against him, and knocked him fe. we began best and We agreed first, and as almost ot, wished aced next, remainder, n that we on our arld it as we ction.: He definitely The party rder whilet d they had to be tied ed that our ttle. They in myself to others, and commencing Great care was moving planted the sy had not, asl rope to not it. The yown sake, occurred to ance we two from them, ad not Lord in, to tie on asid, that to hold his

down, and

yed lad ran ermatt, saythe fall from a on to the was reproved right, neveraw.

axe, and in, er security, gs, and puttheir proper no one was speak with ing men were by an interaction by an interaction oulders, that d, was in the wn a step of Mr. Hadow knocked him over. I heard one startied exclamation from Cros, then saw him and Mr. Hadow flying downwards; is another moment Hudson was dragged from his steps, and Lord Douglas immediately after him. All this was the work of a moment. Immediately we heard Cros's exclamation, old Peter and I plantad ourselves as firmly as the rocks would permit; the rope was taut between us, and the jerk came on us both as on one man. We held, but the rope broke midway between Taugwalder and Lord Francis Douglas. For a few seconds we saw our unfortunate companions aliding downwards on their backs, and spreading out their hands, endeavouring to save themselves. They passed from our eight uninjured, disappeared one by one, and fell from precipice to precipice on to the Matterhorn glacier below, a distance of nearly 4,000 feet in height. From the moment the rope broke it was impossible to help them. So periched our comrades !

For more than two hours afterwards I thought almost every moment that the next would be my last; for the Taugwalders, utterly unnerved, were not only incapable of giving assistance, but were in such a state that a slip might have been expected from them at any moment. After a time we were able to do that which should have been done at first, and fixed rope to firm rocks, in add tion to being tied together. These ropes were cut from time to time, and were left behind. Even with their assurance the men were afraid to proceed, and several times old Peter turned, with ashy face and faltering limbs, and said, with terrible emphasis, 'I cannot!'

About 6 p. m. we arrived at the snow upon the ridge descending towards Zermatt, and all peril was over. We frequently looked, but in vain, for traces of our unfortunate companions; we bent over the ridge and cried to them, but no sound returned. Convinced at last that they were neither within sight nor haring, we ceased from our useless efforts; and, too cast down for speech, silently gathered up our things, and the little effects of those who were lost, and then completed the descent.

Such is Mr. Whymper's graphic and thrilling narrative. Zermatt gossip darkly hints that the elder Taugwalder cut the rope, when the accident occurred, in order to preserve himself from being dragged into the abyss; but Mr. Whymper says that the ends of the rope showe no evidence of cutting, but only of breaking. He adds that if Taugwalder had had the disposition to cut the rope, he would not have had time to do it, the accident was so sudden and unex-

Lord Douglas's body has never been found. It probably lodged upon some inaccessible shelf in the face of the mighty precipies. Lord Douglas was a youth of 19. The three other victims fell nearly 4,000 feet, and their bodies lay together upon the glacier when found by Mr. Whymper and the other searchers the next morning. Their graves are beside the little church in Zermatt.

CHAPTER XLIL

Switzerland is simply a large, lumpy, solid rook, with a thin skin of grass stretched over it. Consequently, they do not dig graves, they blast them out with powder and fuse. They cannot afford to have large graveyards, the grass skin is too circumscribed and too valuable. It is all required for the support of the living.

support of the living.

The graveyard in Zermatt occupies only one-eighth of an acre. The graves are sunk in the living rock, and are very permanent; but occupation of them is only temporary; the occupant can only stay till his grave is needed by a later subject; he is removed, then, for they do not bury one body on top of another. As I understand it, a family owns a grave, just as it owns a house. A man dies, and leaves his house to his son—and at the same time, this dead father succeeds to his ownafather's grave. He moves out of the same time, this dead father succeeds to his ownafather's grave, and his predecessor moves out of the grave and into the cellar of the chapel. I saw a black box: lying in the churchyard, with skull and cross-bones painted on it, and was teld that this was used in transferring remains to the cellar.

In that cellar the bones and skulls of several hundreds of former citizens were compactly corded up. They made a pile 18 feet long, 7 feet high, and 8 feet wide. I was told that in some of the receptacles of this kind in the Swiss villages, the skulls were all marked, and if a man wished to find the skulls of his ancestors back, he could do it by these marks, preserved in the family records.

An English gentleman who had lived some years in this region, said it was the cradle of compulsory education. But he said that the English idea that compulsory education would reduce bestardy and intemperance was an error—it has not that effect. He said there was more seduction in the Protestant than in the Catholic cantons, because the confessional protected the girls. I wonder why it doesn't protect married women in France and Spain?

This gentleman said that among the poorer peasants in the Valais, it was common for the brothers in a family to cast lots to determine which of them should have the coveted privilege of marrying. Then the lucky one got married, and his brethren doomed bachelors—heroically banded themselves together to help support the new family.

to where the second of the second of the second one morning. Again we passed between those grass-clad prodigious cliffs, specked with wee dwellings peeping over at us from velvety, green walls ten and twelve hundred feet high. It did not seem possible that the imaginary chamois even, could climb those precipices. Lovers on opposite cliffs probably kins through a spy-glass, and correspond with a rifle.

In Switzerland the farmer's plow is a wide shovel, which acrapes up and turns over the thin earthly skin of his native rock—and there the man of the plow is a hero. Now here, by our St. Nicholas road, was a grave, and it had a tragic story. A plowman was skinning his farm one morning—not the steepest part of it, but still a steep part—that is, he was not skinning the front of his farm, but the roof of it, near the eaves—when he absent-mindedly let go of the plow-handles to moisten his hands, in the usual way: he lost his balance and fell out of his farm backwards, poor fellow, he never touched anything till he struck bottom, 15,000 feet below. This was on a Sunday. M. T. We throw a helo of heroism around the life of the soldier and the sailor, because of the deadly dangers they are facing all the time. But we are not used to looking upon farming as a heroic occupation. This is because we have not lived in Switzerland.

From St. Nicholas we struck out for Visp —or Vispach—on foot. The rain storms had been at work during several days, and had done a deal of damage in Switzerland and Savoy. We came to one place where a stream had changed its coarse and plunged down the mountain in a new place, sweeping every thing before it. Two poor but precious iarms by the roadside were ruined. One was washed clear away, and the bed-rock exposed, the other was buried out of sight under a tumbled chaos of rocks, gravel, mud, and rubbish. The resistless might of water was well exemplified. Some asplings which had stood in the way were bent to the ground, tripped clean of their bark, and buried under rocky debris. The road had been swept away

In another place, where the road was high up on the mountain's face, and its outside edge protected by flimsy macoury, we frequently came across spots where this masonry hid caved off and left dangerous gape for mules to get over; and with still more frequency we found the masonry slightly crumbled, and marked by mule-hoofs, thus showing that there had been danger of an accident to somebody. When at last we came to a badly ruptured bit of masonry, with hoof-prints evidencing a desperate struggle to regain the leat foot-hold, I looked quite hopefully over the dizzy precipios. But there was nobody down there.

hin tle

to was at sist

situ

Ex

·F

liev

sho

dia

fro

Ver

ide

BOY

mu

of ro at pl

They take exceedingly good care of their rivers in Switzerland and other portions of Europe. They wall up both banks with slanting solid stone masonry—so that from end to end of these rivers the banks look liks the wharfs at St. Louis and other towns on the Mississippi river.

It was during this walk from St. Nicholas in the shadow of the majestic Alps, that we came across some little children amusing themselves in what seemed, at first, a most odd and original way—but it wasn't : it was in simply a natural and characteristic way They were roped together with a string they had alpenatocks and ice-axes, and were climbing a meek and lowly manure pile with a most blood-ourdling amount of care and caution. The 'guide' at the head of the line out imaginary steps, in a labourious and painstaking way, and not a monkey budged till the step above him was vacated. If we had waited we should have witnessed an imaginary accident, no doubt; and we should have heard the intrepid band hurrah when they made the summit and looked around upon the 'magnificent view,' and seen them throw themselves down in exhausted attitudes for a rest in that commanding situation.

In Nevada I used to see the children play at silver mining. Of course the great thing was an accident in a mine, and there were two 'star' parts: that of the man who fell down the mimic shaft, and that of the daring hero who was lowered into the depths to bring him up. I knew one small chap who always insisted on playing both of these parts—and he carried his point. He would tumble into the shaft and die, and then come to the surface and go back after his own remains.

It is the smartest boy that gets the heropart, everywhere; he is head guide in Switzerland, head miner in Nevada, head bull-fighter in Spain, etc., but I knew a preacher's son, seven years old, who once selected a part for himself compared to which those just mentioned are tame and unimpressive. Jimmy's father atopped him from driving imaginary horse cars on Sunday—is mason gape for more ... ne spowf an acci-We came nry, with struggle ked quite re of their portions of anks with that from a look liks r towns on

But there

. Nicholas os, that we amnsing ret, a most o't : it was ristio way string they were climb-with a most ad caution. e line out and painsbudged till If we had d an imagiwe should urrah when sed around l seen them ildren play great thing there were an who fell f the daring e depths to ll chap who h of these He would d then come his own reusted attiading situs.

ts the herod guide in I knew a , who once red to which and unimed him from n Sundayetopped him from playing captain of an imaginary steambook next Sunday—atopped him from leading an imaginary army to battle the following Sunday—and so on. Finally the little fellow said:

¥¢

'I've tried everything, and they won't any of them do. What can I play?
'I hardly know, Jimmy; but you must play only things that are suitable to the Sabbath day.'

Next Sunday the prescher stepped softly to a back room door to see if the children were rightly employed. He peeped in. A chair occupied the middle of the room, and chair occupied the middle of the room, and on the back of it hung Jimmy's cap; one of the little sisters took the cap down, nibbled at it, then passed it to another small sister and said, 'Eat of this fruit, for it is good.' The Reverend took in the situation—alas, they were playing the Expulsion from Eden! Yet he found one little orumb of comfort. He said to himself, it is a suit of the said to himself, it is a suit of the said to himself, and the said to himself, a 'For once Jimmy has yielded the chief role -I have been wronging him, I did not be-lieve there was so much modesty in him : I should have expected him to be either Adam or Eve.' This crumb of comfort lasted but or Eve. In a crame of comfort lasted par-a very little while; he glanced around and discovered. Jimmy standing in an imposing attitude in a corner, with a dark and deadly frown on his face. What that meant was very plain—he was personating the Deity! Think of the guileless sublimity of that

We reached Vispach at 8 p.m., only about seven hours out from St. Nicholas. So we must have made fully a mile and a half an hour, and it was all down hill, too, and very muddy at that. We stayed all night at the Hotel du Soliel; I remember it because the landlady, the portier, the waitress, and the chambermaid, were not separate persons, but were all contained in one neat and chipper suit of spotless muslin, and she was the prettiest young creature that I saw in all that region. She was the landlord's daughter. And I remember that the only native match to her I saw in all Europe was the young daughter of the landlord of a village inn in the Black Forest. Why den't more people in Europe marry and keep hotel?

Next morning we left with a family of English friends and went by train to Brevet, and thence by boat across the lake to Ouchy (Lausanne.)

Ouchy is memorable to me, not on account of its beautiful situation and lovely surroundings,—although these would make it stick long in one's memory,—but as the place where I caught the London Times dropping into humour. It was not aware of it, though. It did not do it on purpose. An English friend called my attention to this lapse, and out out the reprehensible paragraph for me. Think of encountering a grin like this on the face of that grim ERRATUE.—We are requested by Reuter's Telegram Company to correct an erroseous announcement unde in their! Brishme telegram of the 2nd inst., published in our impression of the 5th inst., stating that 'Lady Kennedy had given birth to twins, the eldest being a son.' The Company explain that the message they received contained the worde 'Governer of Queensland, twins first son.' Being, however, subsequently informed that Sir Arthur Kennedy was unmarried and that there must be some mistake, a telegraphic repetition was at once demanded. It has been received to-day (11th inst.) and shows that the words really telegraphed by Reuter's agent were 'Governer Queensland turns first sod,' alluding to the Maryborough Gympic Railway in course of construction. The words in italies were mutilated by the telegraph in transmission ERRATUM.—We are requested by Reuter's mutilated by the telegraph in transmission from Australia, and reaching the company in the form mentioned above gave rise to the mistake.

mistake.

I had always had a deep and reverent compassion for the sufferings of the 'prisoner of Chillon,' whose story Byron has told in such moving verse; so I took the steamer and made pilgrimage to the dungeons of the Castle of Chillon, to see the place where poor Bonivard endured his dreary captivity 300 years ago. I am glad I did that, for it took away some of the pain I was feeling on the prisoner's account. His dungeon was a nice. cool. roomy place, and I cannot see nice, cool, roomy place, and I cannot see why he should have been so dissatisfied with it. If he had been imprisoned in a St. Nicholas private dwelling, where the fertilizer prevails, and the goat sleeps with the guest, and the chickens roost on him, and the cow comes in and bothers him when he wants to muse, it would have been another matter altogether; but he surely could not have had a very obserless time of it in that pretty dungeon. It has romantic window-slits that let in generous bars of light, and it has tall, noble columns, carved apparently from the living rock; and what is more, they are written all over with thousands of names; some of them,—like. Byron's and Victor Hugo's,—of the first celebrity. Why didn't he amuse himself reading these names? Then there are the couriers and tourists—swarms of them every day-what was to hinder him from having a good time with them? I think Bonivard's sufferings have been overrated, but , s

Next, we took the train and went to Martigny, on the way to Mont Blanc. Nex morning, we started, about 8 o'clock, on foot. We had plenty of company, in the way of waggon loads and mule-loads of tourists—and dust. This scattering procession of travel-lers was perhaps a mile long. The road was up hill—interminably up hill—and tolerably steep. The weather was blistering hot, and the man or woman who had to sit on a creeping mule, or in a orawling waggon, and broil in the beating sun, was an object to be pitied. We could dodge among the bushes, and have the relief of the shade, but those people could not. They paid for a conveyance, and to get their money's worth they rode.

the We went by way of the We Tete Noir, and after reached high ground, there was no lack of fine scenery. In one place the road was tunnelled through a shoulder of the mountain, from there one looked down into a gorge with a rushing torrent in it, and on every hand was a charming view of rocky butter-eses and wooded heights. There was a liberal allowance of pretty water-falls, too, on the Tete Noir route.

About half an hour before we reached the village of Argentiere a vast dome of snow with the sun blazing on it, drifted into view and framed itself in a strong V-shaped gate-way of the mountains, and we recognized Mont Blanc, the 'monarch of the Alps.' With every step, after that, this stately dome rose higher and higher into the blue sky, and at last seemed to occupy the

Some of Mont Blanc's neighbours-bare, light-brown, steeple rocks—were very pecu-liarly shaped. Some were whittled to a sharp point, and slightly bent at the upper end, like a lady's finger; one monster sugar-loaf resembled a bishop's hat; it was too eteep to hold snow on its sides, but had some in the division.

While we were still on very high ground, and before the descent toward Argentiere began, we looked up toward a neighbouring mountain-top, and saw exquisite prismatio colours playing about some white clouds which were so delicate as to almost resemble goesamer webs. The faint pinks and greens were peculiarly beautiful; none of the colours were deep, they were the lightest shades. They were bewitchingly commingled. We sat down to etudy and enjoy this singular spectacle. The tints remained during several minutes—flitting, changing, melting into each other; paling almost away, for a moment, ther, re-flushing—a shifting, restless, unstable succession of soft opaline gleams, shimmering over that siry film of except himself-but he, yes, observe him white cloud, and turning it into a fabric dainty enough to clothe an angel with.

By and by we perceived what those superdelicate colours, and their continuous play and movement reminded us of: it is what one sees in a scap-bubble that is drifting along, catching changes of tint from the objects it passes. A scap-bubble is the most beautiful thing, and the most exquisite, in nature; that lovely phantom fabrio in the sky was suggestive of a soap-bubble split open, and spread out in the sun. I wonder how much it would take to buy a soap-buble, if there was only one in the world? One could buy a hatful of Koh-i-Noors with the same money, no doubt.

We made the tramp from Martigny to Argentiere in eight hours. We best all the mules and waggons; we didn't usually do that. We hired a sort of open baggagewaggon for the trip down the valley to Chamonix, and then devoted an hour to diving. This gave the driver time to get drunk. He had a friend with him, and this friend also had had time to get drunk.

friend also had had time to get drunk.

When we drove off, the driver said all the tourists had arrived and gone by while we were at dinner; but, said he, impressively, be not disturbed by that—remain tranquil—give yourselves no uncasines—their dust rises far before us, you shall see it fade and disappear far behind us—rest you tranquil, leave all to me—I am the king of drivers. Behold !

Down came his whip, and away we clattered. I never had such a shaking in my life. The recent flooding rains had washed the road clear away in places, but we never stopped, we never slowed down for anything. We tore right along, over looks, rubbish, gullies, open fields—sometimes with one or two wheels on the ground, but generally with none. Every now and then that calm, goodnatured madman would bend a majestic look over his shoulder at us and say, Ah, you perceive? It is as I have said—I am the Ah, you king of drivers.' Every time we just missed going to destruction, he would say, with tranquil happiness, 'Enjoy it, gentlemen, it is very rare, it is very unusual—it is given to few to ride with the king of drivers—and observe, it is as I have said—I am he.'

He spoke in French, and punctuated with ccups. His friend was French, too, but hiccups. spoke in German—using the same system of punctuation, however. The friend called punctuation, however. The friend called himself the 'Captain of Mont Blans,' and wanted us to make the ascent with him. He said he had made more ascents than any other man-47-andhis brother had made 37. His brother was the best guide in the world, t into a fabric gel with.

at those supercontinuous play of: it is what hat is drifting tint from the bble is the most t exquisite, in h fabrio in the ap-bubble split sun. I wonder ny a soap-buble, world? One Voors with the m Martigny to We beat all the int usually do open baggagethe valley to ted an hour to rer time to get h him, and this et drunk, iver said all the ne by while we he, impressively, remain tranquil ness—their dust see it fade and t you tranquil, king of drivers.

vay we olattered in my life. The mashed the road a never stopped, anything. We rubbish, gullies, the one or two to generally with that calm, good-l a majestic look d say, "Ah, you e said—I am the e we just missed would say, with it, gentlemen, it ual—it is given of drivers—and—I am he."

or drivers—and——I am he.'
punctuated with french, toe, but asme system of the friend called ont Blans,' and at with him. He scents than any
the had made 37.
die in the world,
es, observe him

well—he was the 'Captain of Mont Blanc'—that title belonged to none other.

The 'king' was as good as his word—he overtook that long procession of tourists and went by it like a hurricane. The result was that we got choicer rooms at the hotel in Chamonix than we should have done if his majesty had been a slower artist—or rather, if he hadn't most providentially got drunk before he left Argentiere.

CHAPTER XLIIL

Everybody was out of doors; everybody was in the principal street of the village—not on the aidewalks, but all over the street; everybody was lounging, loafing, chatting, waiting, alert, expectant, interested—for it was train time. That is to say, it was diligence-time—the half-dozen big diligences would soon be arriving from Geneva, and the village was interested, in many ways, in knowing how many people were coming, and what sort of folk they might be. It was altogether the livliest looking street we had seen in any village on the continent.

The hotel was by the side of a booming torrent, whose music was loud and strong; we could not see this torrent, for it was dark, now, but one could locate it without a light. There was a large enclosed yard in front of the hotel, and this was filled with groups of villagers waiting to see the diligences arrive, or to hire themselves to excursionists for the morrow. A telescope stood in the yard, with its huge barrel canted up toward the lustrous evening star. The long porch of the hotel was populous with tourists, who sat in shade had wraps under the vast overshadowing bulk of Mont Blane, and gossiped or medit ted.

Never did a mountain seem so close; its big sides seemed at one's very elbow, and its majestic dome, and the lofty cluster of slender minarets that were its neighbours, seemed to be almost over one's head. It was night in the streets, and the lamps were sparkling everywhere; the broad bases and shoulders of the mountains were in a deep gloom, but their summits awam in a strange gion, but their summits awam in a strange gion glow which was really daylight, and yet had a mellow something about it which was very different from the hard white glare of the kind of daylight I was used to. Its radiance was strong and clear, but at the same time it was singularly soft, and spiritual, and benignant. No, it was not our harsh, aggressive, realistic daylight; it seemed properer to an enchanted land—or to heaven.

I had seen moonlight and daylight together before, but I had not seen daylight and have not the reverent feeling for the min-black night elbow to elbow before. At least I had not seen the daylight resting upon an object sufficiently close at hand before, to make the contrast startling and at war with nature.

The daylight passed away. Presently the moon rose up behind some of those skypiercing fingers or pinnacles of bare rock of which I have spoken—they were a little to the left of the crest of Mont Blanc, and right over our heads-but she couldn't manage to climb high enough toward heaven to get entirely above them. She would show the glittering arch of her upper third, occasionally and scrape it along behind the comblike row; sometimes a pinnacle atood straight up, like a statuette of ebony, against that glittering white shield, then seemed to glide out of it by its own volition and power, and become a dim spectre, whilst the next pinnacle glided into its place and blotted the spotless disc with the black exclamation point of its presence. The top of one pin-nacle took the shapely, clean cut form of a rabbit's head, in the inkiest silhouette, while it rested against the moon. The un-illumined peaks and minarets, hovering vague and phanton-like above us while the others were painfully white and strong with snow and moonlight, make a peculiar effect.

But when the moon, having passed the line of pinnacles, was hidden behind the stupendous white swell of Mont Blanc, the masterpiece of the evening was flung on the canvas. A rich, greenish radiance sprang into the sky from behind the mountain, and in this some airy shreds and ribbons of vapour floated about, and being flushed with that strange tint, went waving to and fro like pale green flames. After a while, radiating bars—vast broadening fanshaped shadows—grew up and stretched away to the zenith from behind the mountain. It was a spectacle to take one's breath, for the wonder of it, and the sublimity.

Indeed, those mighty bars of alternate light and shadow streaming up from behind that dark and prodigious form and occupying the half of the dult and opsque heavens, was the most imposing and impressive marvel I had ever looked upon. There is no simile for it, for nothing is like it. If a child had asked me what it was, I should have said, 'Humble yourself, in this presence, it is the glory flowing from the hidden head of the Creator.' One falls shorter of the truth than that sometimes, in trying to explain mysteries to the little people. I could have found out the cause of this lawe-compelling miracle by inquiring, for it is not infrequent at Mont Blano—but I did not wish to know. We have not the reverant feeling for the min-bow that a savage has, because we know how it is made. We have lost as much as we gained by prying into that matter.

We took a walk down street, a block or two, and at a place where four streets met and the principal atreets were clustered, found the groups of men in the roadway thicker than ever—for this was the Exchange of Chamonix. These men were in the contumes of guides, and porters and were there to be hired.

The office of that great personage, the Guide in Chief of the Chamonix Guild of Guides, was near by. The guild is a close corporation, and is governed by strict laws. There are many excursion-routes, some dangerous and some not, some that can be made safely without a guide, and some that cannot. The bureau determines these things. Where it decides that a guide is necessary, you are forbidden to go without one. Neither are you allowed to be a victim of extortion; the law states what you are to pay. The guides serve in rotation; you cannot select the man who is to take your life into his hands, you must take the worst in the lot, if it is his

A guide's fee ranges all the way up from a half dollar (for some trifling excursion of a few rods,) to twenty dollars, according to the distance traversed and the nature of the ground. A guide's fee for taking a person to the summit of Mont Blanc and back, is twenty dollars and he earns it. The time employed is usually three days, and there is enough early rising in it to make a man far more 'healthy and wealthy and wise' than any one man has any right to be. The porter's feeffor the same trip is ten dollars. Several fools—no, I mean several tourists—usually go together, and divide up the expense, and thus make it light; for if only one f-tourist, I mean—went, he would have to have several guides and porters, and that would make the matter costly.

We went into the Chief's office. There were maps of mountains on the walls; also one or two lithographs of celebrated guides, and a portrait of the scientist De Saussure. In glass cases were some labeled fragments of boots and batons, and other suggestive relics and remembrances of casualities on Mont Blane. In a book was a record of all the ascents which have ever been made, beginning with Nos. I and 2—being these of Jacques Balmat and De Saussure, in 1787, and ending with No. 685, which wasn't cold yet. In fact No. 685 was standing by the official table, waiting to receive the precious official diploma which should prove to his German household and to the descendants that he had once been indisor et enough to climb to the top of Mont Blanc. He looked very happy when he got his document; in fact, he spoke up and said he

o

at the Si

w

in

ul di

br

at ou

cli

6, R

enaminy wat coming the bit while this bell a padd

I tried to buy a diploma for an invalid friend athome who had never travelled, and whose desire all his life has been to ascend Mont Blanc, but the Guide-in-Chief rather insolently refused to sell me one. I was very much offended. I said I did not propose to be discriminated against on account of my nationality; that he had just sold a diploma to this German gentleman, and my money was as good as his; I would see to it that he couldn't keep shop for Germans and deny his produce to Americans; I would have his license taken away from him at the dropping of a handkerchief; if France refused to break him, I would make an international matter of it and bring on a war; the soil should be drenched with blood; and not only that, but I would set up an opposition shop and sell diplomas at half price.

For two cents I would have done these things, too: but nobody offered me the two cents. I tried to move that German's feelings, but it could not be done; he would not give me his diploms, neither would he sell it to me. I told him my friend was sick and could not come himself, but he said he did not care a verdammtes plennig, he wanted his diploma for himself—did I suppose he was going to risk his neck for that thing and then give it to a sick stranger? Indeed he wouldn't, so he wouldn't. I resolved, then, that I would do all I could to injure Mont

In the record book was a list of all the fatal accidents which had happened on the mountain. It began with the one in 1820 when the Russian Dr. Hamel's three guides were lost in the crevice of the glader, and it recorded the delivery of the remains in the valley by the slow-moving glacier 41 years later. The latest estastrophe bore date of 1877.

We stepped out and roved about the village awhile. In front of the little church was a monument to the memory of the bold guide Jacques Balmat, the first man who ever stood upon the summit of Mont Blane.
made that wild trip solitary and alone. accomplished the ascent a number of times afterward. A stretch of nearly half a century lay between his first ascent and his last one. At the ripe old age of 72 he was climbing around a corner of a lofty precipice of the Pio du Midi—nobody with him—when he slipped and fell. So he died in the harness.

He had grown very avarious in his old age, and used to go off stealthily to hunt for non-existent and impossible gold among these

Blanc. got his aid he invalid led, and ascend ther in-VAS VOTY opose to at of my diploma y money t that he nd deny have his dropping to break d matter hould be that, but and sell one these

e the two an's feelwould not he sell it sick and aid he did he wanted ose he was and then ideed he ved, then, jure Mont ll the fatal the moun-820 when ides were and it rer 41 years re date of ut the viltle church of the bold n who ever Slane. He slone. er of times fa century is last one. s climbing e of the Pic he slipped

s in his old to hunt for mong these perilous peaks and precipices. He was on a quest of that kind when he lost his life. There was a statue to him, and another to De Saussure, in the hall of our hotel, and a metal plate on the door of a room up stairs bore an inscription to the effect that that room had been occupied by Albert Smith. Balmat and De Saussure discovered Mont Blanc—so to speak—but it was Smith who made it a paying property. His articles in Blackwood and his lectures on Mont Blanc in London advertised it and made people as anxious to see it as if it owed them money.

As we strolled along the road we looked up and saw a red signal light glowing in the darkness of the mountain side. It seemed but a trifling way up—perhaps a hundred yards, a climb of ten minutes. It was a lucky piece of asgacity in us that we concluded to stop a man whom we met and get a light for our pipes from him instead of continuing the climb to that lantern to get a light, as had been our purpose. The men said that that lantern was on the Grands Mulets, some 6,500 feet above the valley! I know by our Riffelberg experience that it would have taken us a good part of a week to go up there. I would sooner not smoke at all, than take all that trouble for a light.

Even in the daytime the foreshortening effect of the mountain's close proximity creates curious deceptions. For instance, one sees with the naked eye a cabin up there besides the glaciers, and a little above and beyond he sees the spot where the red light was located; he thinks he could throw a stone from one place to another. But he couldn't, for the difference between the two altitudes is more than 3,000 feet. It looks impossible from below that this can be true, while strolling about we kept the run of the moon all the time, and we still kept an eye on her after we got back to the hotel portion. I had a theory that the gravitation of re-fraction, being subsidiary to atmospheric com-pensation, the refrangibility of the earth's sur-face would emphasize this effect in regions where great mountain ranges occur, and possi-blyso even handedly impact the odic and idyl lic forces together, the one upon the other, as to prevent the moon from rising higher than 12 200 feet above sea level. This daring theory has been received with frantic soon by some of my fellow-scientists, and with an professional jealousy, a scientist will never show any kindness or a theory which he did not start himself. There is no feeling of brotherhood among these people. Indeed, they always resent it when I call them brother. To show how far their ungenerosity can carry them, I will state that I offered to y publish my great let Prof. Htheory as his own discovery : I even begged him to do it; I even proposed to print it myself as his theory. Instead of thanking me, he said that if I tried to fasten that theory on him he would sue me for slander. I was going to offer it to Mr. Darwin, whom I understood to be a man without prejudices, but it occurred to me that perhaps he would not be interested in it since it did not concern hardly,

But I am glad, now, that I was forced to father my intrepid theory myself, for on the night of which I am writing, it was triumph-antly justified and established. Mont Blanc is nearly 16,000 feet high; he hid the moon utterly; near him is a peak which is 12,216 feet high; the moon slid along behind the pinnacles, andwhen she approached that one, I watched her with intense interest, for my reputation as a scientist must stand or fall by its decision. I cannot describe the emotions which surged like tidal waves through my breast when I saw the moon glide behind that lofty needle and pass it by without exposing more than two feet four inches of her upper rim above it! I was secure, then. I knew she could rise no higher, and I was right. She sailed behind all the peaks and never succeded in hoisting her disc above a While the moon was behind one of those sharp fingers, its shadow was flung athwart the vacant heavens—a long, slanting, clean-out, dark ray—with a streaming and ener-getic suggestion of force about it, such as the ascending jet of water from a powerful fire engine affords. It was curious to see a good strong shadow of an earthly object cast upon se intangible a field as the atmosphere.

We went to bed, at last, and went quickly to sleep, but I woke up, after about three hours, with throbbing temples, and a head which was physically sore, outside and in. I was dazed, dreamy, wretched, seedy, un-refreshed. I recognized the occasion of all this; it was that torrent In the mountain villages of Switzerland, and along the roads, one has always the roar of the torrent in his ears. He imagines it is music, and he thinks poetic things about it; he lies in his com-fortable bed and is lulled to sleep by it. But by and by he begins to notice that his head is very sore-he cannot account for it; in solitudes where the profoundest silence reigns, he notices a sullen, distant, continuous roar in his ears, which is like what he would ex-perience if he had sea shells pressed against them—he cannot account for it; he is drowsy of Back to the first and absent-minded; there is no tenacity to his mind, he cannot keep held of a thought and follow it out; if he sits down to write, his vocabulary is empty, no suitable words will come, he forgets what he started to do, and remains there, pen in hand, head tilted up, eyes closed, listening painfully to the muffled roar of a distant train in his ears; in his soundest sleep, the strain continues, he goes on listening, always listening, in-tently, anxiously, and wakes at last, harassed, irritable, unrefreshed. He cannot manage to account for these things. Day after day he feels as if he had spent his nights in a alceping car. It actually takes him weeks to find out that it is those perse-outing torrents that have been making all the mischief. It is time for him to get out of Swit rland, then, for as soon as he has discovered the cause, the misery is magnified several fold. The roar of the torrent is maddening, then, for his imagination is assisting; the physical pain it inflicts is exquisite. When he fluds he is approaching one of those streams, his dread is so lively that he is disposed to fly the track and avoid the implacable foe.

. Eight or nine months after the distress of the torrents had departed from me, the roar and thunder of the streets of Paris brought it all back again. I moved to the sixth storey of the hotel to hunt for peace. About midnight the noises dulled away, and I was sinking to sleep, when I heard a new and curious sound; I listened; evidently some joyous lunatic was softly dancing a 'double shuffle' in the room over my head. I had to wait for him to get through, of course. Five long, long minutes, he smoothly shuffled away—a panse followed, then some-thing fell with a heavy thump on the floor. I said to myself 'There—he is pulling off his boots—thank heaven he is done.' Another slight pause—he went to shuffling again! I said to myself, 'Is he trying to see what he can do with only one boot on?' Presently came another pause and another thump on the floor. I said 'Good, he has pulled off his other boot—now he is done.' But he his other boot—now he is done. But he wasn't. The next moment he was shuffling again. I said, 'Confound him, he is at it in his slippers!' After a little cause that same old pause, and right after it that thump on the floor once more. I said, 'Hang him, he had en two pair of boots!' For an hour that magician went on shuffling and pulling off boots till he had shed as a many as twenty five mair and I was as many as twenty-five pair, and I was hovering on the verge of lunacy. I got my gun and stole up there. The fellow was in the midst of an acre of sprawling boots, and he had a boot in his hand, shuffling it-no I mean polishing it. The mystery was explained. He hadn't been dreaming. He was the 'Boots' of the hotel, and was attending to business.

Pot Wo

by beamore and fit

kne

scie

the if i and

T but

hole COD

sun eye ame

" CHAPTER XLIV.

MAfter breakfast, that next morning in Chamonix, we went out in the yard and watched the gange of excursionising tourists arriving and departing with their mules and guides and porters; then we took a look through the telescope a the snowy hump of Mont Blanc. It was brilliant with summed, handly and the vast smooth bulge seemed hardly five hundred miles away. With the naked eye we could dimly made out the house at the Pierre Pointue, which is located by the side of the great glacier, and is more than 3,000 feet above the level of the valley; but with the telescope we could see all its details. While I looked, a woman rode by the house on a mule, and I saw her with sharp distinctness; I could have described her dress. I saw her nod to the people of the house, and rein up her mule. and put her hand up to shield her eyes from the sun. I hand up to shield her eyes from the sun. I was not used to telescopes; in fact I never had looked through a good one before; it seemed incredible to me that this woman could be so far away. I was satisfied that I could see all these details with my nated eye; but when I tried it, that mule and those vivid people had wholly vanished, and the house itself, was become small and vague. I tried the telescope again, and again everything was vivid. The strong black shadows of the mule and the woman were flung against the side of the house, and I saw the mule's silhouette wave iss tears. The telescopulariat—I do not know which is right—said a party were making the grand ascent, and would come in sight on the remote upper heights, presently; so we waited to observe this per-presently; so we waited to observe this performance.

formance.

Presently I had a superb idea. I wanted to stand with a party on the summit of Mount Blanc, merely to be able to say I had done it, and I believed the 'telescope could set me within seven feet of the uppermost man. The telescoper assured me that it could. I then asked him how much I owed him for as far as I had got? He said, one franc. I asked him how much it would cost me to make the entire ascent. Three france. I at once determined to make the entire ascent. But first I enquired if there was any cent. But first I enquired if there was any danger? He said no—not by telescope; said he had taken a great many parties to the summit, and never lost a man. I asked

ing. He rae at-orning in yard and g tourists mules and ok a look hump of sunshine, ad hardly the naked house at ted by the mere than alley; but

all its deode by the vith sharp
cribed her ople of the nd put her the sun. ot I never before : it this woman stied that I my naked mule and olly TADolly van-tried the ything was

dows of the rere flung e, and I saw iss tears. copulariat-aid a party and would per heights, eve this per-

I wantsummit of to say I had scope could e uppermost much I owed He said, one it would cost Three france. he entire asy telescope; ny parties to nan. I asked what he would charge to let my agent go with me, together with such guides and porters as might be necessary? He said he perters as might be necessary? He said he would let Harris go for two francs; and that unless we were unusually timid, he should consider guides and porters unnecessary; it was not customary to take them when going by telescope, for they were rather an incuabrance than a help. He said that the party now on the mountain were approaching the most difficult part, and if we hurried we should evertake them within ten minutes, and could then join them and have the bene-should evertake them within ten minutes, and could then join them and have the benefit of their guides and porters without their knowledge, and without expense to us.

I then said we would start immediately. I believe I said it calmly, though I was conscious of a shudder and of a paling cheek, in view of the nature of the exploit I was so unreflectingly engaging in. But the old deredayil spirit was upon me, and I said that as I had committed myself I would not back down: I would ascend Mount Blance back down; I would ascend Mount Blanc if it cost me my life. I told the man to slant his machine in the proper direction and let us be off.

Harris was afraid and did not want to go but I heartened him up and said I would hold his hand all the way; so he gave his consent, though he trembled a little at first. I took a last pathetic look upon the pleasant summer scene about me, then boldly put my eye to the glass and prepared to mount among the grin glaciers and the everlasting

We took our way carefully and cautiously across the great Glacier des Bossons, over yawning and terriffic orevices and almost imposing orage and buttresses of ice which were fringed with icicles of gigantic propertions. The desert of ice that atretched for and wide about us was wild and desclate have and description and the parils which he beyond description, and the perils which becet us were so great that at times I was minded to turn back. But I pulled my pluck together and pushed on.

We passed the glacier safely and began to count the stoom beyond, with great celerity. When we were seven minutes out from the starting point, we resched an altitude where the seene took a new aspect; an apparently limitless continent of gleaming anow was silted heavenward before our faces. As my eye followed that awful acclivity far away up into the remote skies, it seemed to me that all I had ever seen before of sublimity and magnitude was small and insignificant com-pared to this.

We rested a moment and then began to mount with speed. Within three misutes we caught aight of the party shead of us, and stopped to observe them. There were toiling up a long, slanting ridge of snow-twelve persons, roped together some fifteen feet apart, marching in single file, and strongly marked against the clear blue sky. One was a woman. We could see them lift their feet and put them down; we saw them awing their alpenstocks forward in unison like so many pendulums, and then bear their weight upon them; we saw the lady wave her handkerchief. They dragged themselves upward in a worn and weary way, for they ner nandscroniet. They dragged themselves upward in a worn and wearv way, for they had been climbing steadily from the Grands Mulets, on the Glacier des Bossons, since three in the morning, and it was eleven, now We saw them sink down in the snow and rest, and drink something from a bottle. After a while they moved on, and as they approached the final short dash of the homestratch we closed up on them and joined stretch we closed up on them and joined them.

Presently we all stood together on the summit. What a view was spread out below! Away off under the north-western horizon rolled the silent billows of the Farnese Oberland, their shows creets glinting softly in the subdued lights of distance; in the north rose the giant form of the Wobblehorn, draped from peak to shoulder in sable thunder clouds; beyond him, to the right, stretched the grand processional summits of the Cisalpine Cordillers, drowned in a sensuous haze; to the east loomed the coloss-al masses of the Yeddlehorn and Fuddle-horn and the Dinnerhorn, their cloud-less summits flashing white and cold in the sun; beyond them shimmered the faint the sun; beyond them shimmered the faint far line of the Ghauts of Jubbelpore and the Aiguilles des Alleghenies; in the south towered the smoking peak of Popocatapet and the unapproachable altitudes of the peerless Scrabblehorn; in the west-south-west the stately range of the Himmalayas lay dreaming in a purple gloom; and thence all around the curving horizon the eye roved over a troubled sea of sun-kissed Alps, and noted, here and there, the noble proportions and soaring domes of the Bottlehorn, and the Saddlehorn, and the Shovelhorn, and the Powderhorn, all bathed in the glory of noon and mottled with softly-gliding blots, the shadows flux from drifting clouds.

Overcome by the scene, we all rased a triumphant, tremendous shot, in unison.

triumphant, tremendous shot, in unison. A startled man at my elbow said—

THE PERSON NAMED IN COLUMN

Confound you, what do you yell like that, for, right here in the atreat?

That brought me down to Chamonix, like a flirt. I gave that man some spiritual adwhere it have that man some spiritual advice and disposed of him, and then paid the telescope man his full fee, and said that we were charmed with the trip and would remain down, and not re-ascend and require him to fetch us down by telescope. This pleased him very much, for of course we could have stepped back to the summit and put him to the trouble of bringing us home if we had wanted to.

I judged we could get diplomas, now, any-how; so we went after them, but the Chief duide put us off, with one pretextor another, during all the time we staid in Chamonix, and we ended by never cetting them at all. So much for his prejudice against people's nationality. However we worked him enough to make him remember us and our ascent for some time. He even said, once, that he wished there was a lunatic asylum in Chamonix. This shows that he really had fears that we were going to drive him mad. It was what we intended to do, but lack of time defeated it.

I cannot venture to advise the reader one I cannot venture to advise the resder one way or the other, as to ascending Mont Blanc. I say only this: if he is at all timid, the enjoyments of the trip will hardly make up for the hardships and sufferings he will have to endure. But if he has good nerve, youth, health, and a bold, firm will, and could leave his family comfortably provided for in case the worst happened, he would find the ascent a wonderful experience, and the view from the top a vision to dream about, and tell about, and recall with exultation all the days of his iffa.

iife. While I do not advise such a person to attempt the ascent, I do not advise him against it. But if he elects to attempt it, let him be warily careful of two things : choose a calm, clear day; and do not pay the telescope man clear day; and do not pay the telescope man in advance. There are dark stories of his getting advance-payers on the summit and then leaving them there to rot.

A frightful tragedy was once witnessed through the Chamonix telescope. Think of questions and answers like these, on an in-

Coroner-You saw deceased lose his life? Witness-I did.

O.—Where was he at the time?
W.—Close to the summit of Mount Blanc.
C.—Where were you?

W .- In the main street of Chamonix.

C.—What was the distance between pou!
W.—A little over five miles, as the bird

This accident occurred in 1866, a year and a month after the disaster on the Matter-horn. Three adventurous English gentle-men, of great experience in mountain climb-ing, made up their minds to ascend Mount Blano without guides or porters. All en-deavours to dissuade them from their pro-ject failed. Powerful telescopes are nume-rous in Chamonix. These huge brass tubes, All enmounted on their scaffoldings and pointing to mary in to rid safet. . . will be a. .

skyward from every choice vantage-ground, have the formidable look of artillery, and give the town the general aspect of getting ready to repel a charge of angels. The reader may easily believe that the telescope had plenty of custom on that August mora-ing in 1866, for everbody knew of the dan-gerous undertaking which was on foot, and all had fears that misfortune would result. All the morning the tubes remain-mained directed toward the mountain heights, each with its anxious group around it; but the white deserts were vacant.

gr th

80

fre

da

2

th SD di

Yo

di the rec cot wa cat the hot nin

the

10,0 the

the

nn DOG

his cah and with reliferon dia eor nig wo dan to of the nor was up ap-

At last, toward eleven o'clock, the people who were looking through the telescopes oried out 'There they are!'—and sure enough, far up, on the loftiest terraces of the Grand Plateau, the three pigmies appeared, olimbing with remarkable vigour and spirit. They disappeared in the 'Corridor,' and were lost to sight during an hour. Then they reappeared, and were presently seen standing together upon the extreme summit of Mount Blanc. So far, all was well. They remained a few minutes on that highest point of land in Europe, a target for all the telescopes, and were then seen to begin the descent. Suddenly all three vanished. An instant after, they appeared again, two thousand feet below! At last, toward eleven o'clock, the people

Evidently they had tripped and been shot down an almost perpendicular slope of ice to a point where it joined the border of the up-per glacier. Naturally the distant witnesses supposed they were now looking upon three corpses; so they could hardly believe their eyes when they presently new two of the men rise to their feet and bend over the third. During two hours and a half they watched the two busying themselves over the extended form of their brother, who accmed entirely inert. Chamonix's affairs stood still; everybody was in the street, all interest was centred upon what was going on upon that lofty and isolated stage five miles away. Finally the two,—one of them walking with great difficulty.—were seen to miles away. Finally the two,—one of them walking with great difficulty,—were seen to begin the descent, abandoning the third, who was no doubt lifeless. Their movements were followed, step by step, until they reached the 'Corridor' and disappeared behind its ridge. Before they had time to traverse the 'Corridor' and reappear, twilight was come, and the power of the teleslight was come, and the power of the telescopes was at an end. It as at a consider of the The survivors had a most perilous journey before them in the gathering darkness, for they must get down to the Grands Mulets before they would find a safe stopping place—a long and tedious descent, and perilous

Sir George Young and his brothers James and Albert | prant out the grant process to grant and the enough even in good day light. The eldest guides expressed the opinion that they could not succeed; that all the chances were that they would lose their lives."

e-ground, lery, and of getting The

the dan-

ld result.

mountain

ip around ant. the people talescopes and sure aces of the appeared, idor, and ir. Then

sently seen ne summit

well. They

at highest for all the begin the ished. An gain, two

d been shot pe of ice to r of the upat witnesses upon three wo of the

i over the other, who

onix's affairs

t was going

one of them

were seen to the third.

r movements

appeared bead, time ... to

of the teles-

ilous journey larkness, for ds Mulets be-ping place - a

and perilous

cothers James of harmy a time of a good at the remain-

Yet those brave men did succeed. They reached the Grands Mulets in safety. Even the fearful shock which their nerves had austained was not sufficient to overcome their coolness and courage. It would appear from the official account that they were threading their way down through those dangers from the closing in of twilight until 2 o'clock in the morning, or later, because the rescuing party from Chamonix reached the Grands Mulets about 3 in the morning, and moving themse toward the scene of the disaster under the leadership of Sir George Young who had only just arrived.

After having been on his feet twenty-four hours, in the exhausting work of mountain climbing. Sir George began the re-ascent at the head of the relief party of six guides, to recover the corpse of his brother. This was considered a new imprudence, as the number was too few for the service required. Another relief party presently arrived at the cabin on the Grauds Mulets and quartered themselves there to await events. Ten hours after Sir George's departure toward the summit, this new relief were still scanning the snowy altitudes above them from their ewn high perch among the ice-deserts 10,000 feet above the level of the sea, but the whole forenoon had passed without a glimpse of any living thing appearing up there.

This was alarming. Half a dozen of their number set out, then, early in the afternoon to seek and succour Sir George and his guides. The persons remaining at the cabin saw these disappear, and then ensued another distressing wait. Four hours passed, without tidings. Then at 5 o'clock another relief, consisting of three guides, set forward from the cabin. They carried food and cordials for the refreshment of their predecessors; they took lanterns with them, too; night was coming on, and to make matters worse, a fine, cold rain had begun to fall.

At the same hour that these began their dangerous ascent, the official Guide-in Chief of the Monta Blanc region undertook the dangerous descent to Chamonix, all alone, to get reinforcements. However, a couple of hours later, at 7 p.m., the anxious solicitude came to an end, and happily. A bugle note was heard, and a cluster of black specks was distinguishable against the snows of the upper heights. The watchers counted these specks eagerly—14—nobody was missing. An hour and a half later they were all safe of the cabin. They had brought the corps with them. Sir George Young tarried there but a few minutes, and then began the long and troublecome descent from the cabin to Chamonix. He probably reached there about 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, after having been afoot among the rocks and glaciers during two days and two nights. His endurance was equal to his daring.

The cause of the unaccountable delay of Sir George and the relief parties among the heights where the disaster had happened, was a thick fog—or, partly that and partly the slow and difficult work of conveying the dead hedy down the partly agreement.

dead body down the perilous steeps.

The corpse, upon being viewed at the inquest, showed no bruises, and it was sometime before the surgeons discovered that the neck was broken. One of the surviving prothers has sustained some unimportant injuries, but the others had suffered no hurt at all. How these men could fall 2,000 feet, almost perpendicularly, and live afterward, is a most strange and unaccountable thing.

A great many women have made the ascent of Mont Blane. An English girl, Miss Stratton, conceived the daring ides, two or three years ago, of attempting the ascent in the middle of winter. She tried it—and she succeeded. Moreover, she froze two of her fingers on the way np, she tell in love with her guide on the summit, and she married him when she got to the bottom again. There is nothing in romance, in the way of striking "situations" which can best this love-scene in mid-heaven on an isolated an Arctic gale blowing.

The first woman who ascended Mont Blanc was a girl aged 22—Mile. Maria Paradis—1809. Nobody was with her but her sweatheart, and he was not a guide. The sex then took a rest for about 30 years, when a Mile. d'Angeville made the ascent—1838. In Chamonix I picked up a rude old lithograph of that day which pictured her 'in the act.

However, I value it less as a work of art than as a fashion plate. Miss d'Angeville put on a pair of men's pantalogns to climb in, which was wise; but the cramped their utility by adding her petticoat, which was idiotic.

One of the mourofulest calamities which men's disposition to climb dangerous mountains has resulted in, happened on Mont Blanc in September, 1870. Mr. d'Arve telle the story briefly in his "Histoire du Mont Blanc." In the next chapter I will copy its chief features.

1 h [ es 174 7 2 4167

CONTRACTOR OHAPTER XLV.

A GATASTROPHE WHICH COST ELEVEN LIVES.

On the 5th of September, 1870, a caravan of eleven persons departed from Chamouix to make the ascent of Mont Blanc. Three of the party were tourists: Mesers, Randall and Bean, Americans, and Mr. George Corkindale, a Scotch gentleman; there were three guides and five porters. The cabin a the Grande Mulets was reached that day; the assent was resumed early the next morning, Sept. 6. The day was fine and clear, and the movements of the party were observed through the telescopes of Chamonix; at two o'clock in the afternoon they were seen to reach the summit." few minutes later they were seen making the first steps of the descent; then a cloud closed around them and hid them from Eight hours passed, the cloud still remained, night came, no one had returned to the Grands Mulets. Sylvain Couttet, keeper of the cabin there, suspected a misfortune, and sent down to the valley for help. detechment of guides went up, but by the time they had made the trip and reached the cabin, a raging storm had set in. They had to wait; nothing could be attempted in such a tempest.

The wild storm lasted more than a week, without ceasing; but on the 17th, Couttet, with several guides, left the cabin and succeeded in making the ascent: In the snowy wastes near the summit they came upon five bodies, lying upon their sides in a re-poseful attitude, which suggested that pos-sibly they had fallen salesp there, exhausted with fatigue and hunger, and benumbed with langue and nunger, and benumbed with cold, and never knew when death stole upon them. Couttet moved a few steps further and discovered five more bodies. The eleventh corpse—that of a porter—was not found, although diligent search was made for it.

In the pocket of Mr. Bean, one of the Americans, was found a note-book in which had been pencilled some sentences which admit us, in flesh and spirit, as it were, to the presence of these men during their last hours of life, and to the grisly horrors which their fading vision looked upon and their failing consciousness took cognisance of :

Tuesday, Sept. 6.—I have made the ascent of Mont Blanc, with ten persons—eight guides, and Mr. Corkindale and Mr. Randall. We recoched the summit at half past two. Immediately after quitting it, we were enveloped in cloids of snow. We passed the night in a grotto hollowed in the snow, which afforded but poor shelter, and I was ill all night.

Sept. 7.—Morning. The cold is excessive. The mow falls heavily and without interruption. The guides take no rest.

Evening. My Dear Hessis, we have been two days on Mont Blanc, in the midst of a terrible hurricane of snow, we have lost our way, and are in a hole scooped in the snow, at an attitude of 18 500 feet. I have no longer any hope of descending.

They had wandered around and around, in that blinding anow storm, hopelessly lost, in a space only a hundred yards square; and when cold and fatigue vanquished them. and when cold and ratigue vanquished them, at last, they scooped their cave and lay down there to die by inches, unaware that five steps more would have brought them into the true path. They were so near to life and safety as thet, and did not suspect it. The thought of this gives the sharpest pang that the tragic story conveys.

The author of the "Histoire du Mont Blane" introduces the closing sentences of Mr. Bean's pathetic record thus:

"Here the characters are large and unateady; the hand which traces them is become chilled and torpid; but the spirit survives, and the faith and resignation of the dying man are expressed with a sublime simplicity.

Perhaps this note book will be found and sent to you. We have nothing to eat, my feet are already frozen, and I am exhausted; I have strength to write only a few words more. If have left means for C.'s education; I know you will employ them wisely. I die with faith in God.' and with loving thoughts of you. Farewell to all. We shall meet again, in Heaven."

I think of you always.

It is the way of the Alps to deliver death to their victims with a merciul swiftness, but here the rule failed. These men suffered the bitterest death that has been recorded in the history of those mountains, freighted as that history is with grisly tragedies. 1916-1908

CHAPTER XLVL tales (4) 35 45

Mr. Harris and I took some guides and porters and ascended to the Hotel de Tyramides, which is perched on the high moraine which borders the Glacier des Boltons. The road led sharply up hill, all the way, through grass and flowers and woods, and was a pleasant walk, barring the fatigue of the ohmb.

From the hotel we could view the huge glacier at very close range. After a rest we followed down a path which had been made in the steep inner frontage of the moraine," and stepped upon the glacier itself. One of the shows of the place was a tunnel-like cavern, which had been hewn in the glacier. The proprietor of this tunnel took candles and conducted us into it. It was three or four fe walls . blue li suggesthing. and w and he woods nder long, the pr pitch WAS III dearly fire if 1000 p his mi melod and pl beck s had go as mu Tho minen swift a

The

saved:

escape

visit t well w force. yet it along, three made counse time-gained is gain one fo of the much thing them tigue, touri We and a ters f idiot to the

pelessly square; and lav rare that ht them near to du Mont tences of suspect

arge and but the signation ith a subd and sent y feet are id; I have more. I know you h faith in ou Faren.

iver death swiftness, on suffered recorded in reighted as The Application guides and I de Fyrasons. The the way, e fatigue of Sugar Albert

w the huge or a root W been made moraine, alf. One of tunnel-like the glacier. res three or four feet wide and about six feet bigh. Its walls of pure solid ice emitted a soft rich blue light that produced a lovely effect, and suggested enchanted caves, and that sort of thing. When we had proceeded some yards and were entering darkness, we curned about and had a dainty and list in the control of and had a dainty sun-lit picture of distant woods and heights framed in the strong arch of the tunnel and seen through the tender blue radiance of the tunnel's atmosphere.

The cavern was nearly a hundred yards long, and when we resched its inner limit the proprietor stepped into a branch tunnel with his candles and left us buried in the bowals of the glacier, and in pitch darkness. We judged his purpose was murder and robbery; so we got out our matches and prepared to sell our lives as dearly as possible by setting the glacier on fire if the worst came to the worst—but we soon perceived that this man had changed his mind; he began to sing, in a deep, melodious voice, and woke some curious and plessing echoes. By and by he came back and pretended that that was what he had gone behind there for. We believed as much of that as we wanted to. as much of that as we wanted to.

as much of that as we wanted to.

Thus our lives had been once more in imminent peril, but by the exercise of the swift sagacity and cool courage which had aved us so often, we had added another escape to the long list. The tourist should visit that ice cavern, by all means, for it is well worth the trouble; but I would advise him to go only with a strong and well-armed force. I do not consider artillery necessary, yet it would not be unadvisable to take it force. I do not consider artillery necessary, yet it would not be unadvisable to take it along, if convenient. The journey, going and coming, is about three miles and a half, three of which are on level ground. We made it in less than a day, but I would counsel the unpractised—if not pressed for time—to allow themselves two. Nothing is gained in the Alps by over-exertion; nothing is gained by crowding two days' work into one for the poor sake of being able to boast of the exploit afterward. It will be found much better, in the long run, to do the thing in two days, and then arbitract one of them from the unrestive. This saves fatigue, and does not injure the narrative. All the more thoughtful among the Alpine touriest do this.

We now called upon the Guide-in-Chief, and asked for a squadron of guides and por-ters for the ascent of the Montanvert. This idiot glared at us, and said :

You don't need guides and porters to go to the Montanvert.
What do we need then What do we need, then !

Such as you?—an ambulance !

I was so stung by this brutal remark that I took my oustom elsewhere.

Betimes, next morning, we had reached Betimes, next morning, we had reached an altitude of 5,000 feet above the level of the sea. Here we camped and oreakfasted. There was a cabin there—the spot is called the Collet—and a spring of ice-oc* water. On the door of the cabin was a sign, in French, to the effect that "One may have see a living chamois for 50 centimes." We did not invest; what we wanted was to see a land or the see a living chamois for 50 centimes.

A little after noon we ended the ascent and arrived at the new hotel on the Montanvert, and had a view of six miles, right up to the great glacier, the famous Mer de Glace. At this point it is like a sea whose deep swales and long, rolling swells have been caught in mid-movement and frozen solid ; but further up it is broken up into wildly-tossing billows of ice.

We descended a ticklish path in the steep side of the moraine, and invaded the glacier. There were tourists of both sexes scattered far and wide over it, everywhere, and it had the festive look of a skating rink.

The Empress Josephine came this far. once. She ascended the Montanvert in 1810 —but not alone; a small army of men pre-ceded her to clear the path—and carpet it, perhaps,—and she followed, under the protection of sixty-eight guides.

Her successor visited Chamouix later, but Her successor visited Chamonix later, but in far different style. It was seven week, after the first fall of the Empire, and poor Marie Louise, ex-Empress, was a fugitive. She came at night, and in a storm, with only two attendants, and stood before a peasant's hut, tired, bedraggled, soaked with rain, "the red imprint of her lost grown still girdling her brow," and implaced emittance. and implored admittance—and was refused!

A few days before, the adulations and applauses of a nation were sounding in her ears, planes of a nation were sounding in her ears, and now she was come to this.!

We crossed the Mer de Glace in safety, but we had misgivings. The crevices in the ice yawned deep and blue and mysterious, and it made one nervous to traverse them. The huge round waves of ice were slippory and difficult to climb, and the chances of tripping and a liding down them and darting into a crevice were teo many to be comfortable.

and darting into a crevice were too many to be comfortable.

In the bottom of a deep swale between two of the biggest of the ice-waves, we found a fraud who pretended to be cutting steps to insure the safety of tourists. He was "soldiering" when we came upon him, but he hopped up and chipped out a couple of steps about big enough for a cat, and charged up a franc or two for it. Then he sat down er harmon en en en en

again, to doze till the next party should come along. He had collected blackmall from two or three hundred people already, that day, but had not chipped out ice enough to impair the glacier perceptibly. I have heard of a good many soft ameoures, but it seems to me that keeping toll-bridge on a glacier is the softest one I have encountered

That was a blaxing hot day, and it brought a persistent and persecuting thirst with it. What an unspeakable luxury it was to slake that thirst with the pure and limpid ice-water of the glacier! Down the sides of every great rib of ice poured limpid rills in gutters carved by their own attrition; better still, wherever a rock had lain, there was now a bowl-shaped hole, with smooth white sides and bottom of ice, and this bowl was brimming with water of such absolute clear-ness that the careless observer would not see it at all, but would think the bowl was empty. These fountains had such an allur-ing look that I often stretched myself out when I was not thirsty and dipped my face in and drank till my teeth ashed. Every-where among the Swiss mountains we had at hand the blessing—not to be found in Europe except in the mountains-of water capable of quenching thirst. Everywhere in the Swiss highlands brilliant little rills of exquisitely cold rater went dancing along by the roadsides, and my comrade and I were always drinking and always delivering our deep gratitude.

But in Europe everywhere except in the mountains, the water is flat and insipid be-youd the power of words to describe. It is served lukewarm; but no matter, ice could not help it; it is incurably flat, incurably insipid. It is only good to wash with; I wonder it doesn't occur to the average inhabitant to try it for that. In Europe the people say contemptuously, 'Nobody drinks water here.' Indeed they have a sound and sufficient reason. In many places they even have what may be called prohibitory reasons. In Paris and Munich, for instance, they say, 'Don's drink the water, it is simply

Either America is healthier than Europe, notwithstanding her 'deadly' indulgence in ice water, or she does not keep the run of her death-rate as sharply as Europe does. I think we do keep up the death-statistics accurately; and if we do, our cities are healthier than the cities of Europe. Every month the German government tabulates the death-rate of the world and publishes it. I scrap-booked these reports during several months, and it was curious to see how regular and persistently each city repeated its same death-rate month after month. The tables death-rate month after month. The tables might as well have been stereotyped, they varied so little. These tables were based upon weekly reports showing the average of deaths in each 1,000 of population for a year. Munich was always present with her 33 deaths in each 1,000 of her population (yearly average,) Chicago was as constant with her 15 or 17, Dublin with her 48—and so on. Only a few American cities appear in these

Only a few American cities appear in these Only a few American cities appear in these tables, but they are scattered so widely over the country that they furnish a good general average of 'city' health in the United States; and I think it will be granted that our towns and villages are healthier than our cities. Here is the average of the only American cities reported in the German tables:

Unicago, deaths in 1,000 of population annually, 16; Philadelphia, 18; St. Louis, 18; San Francisco, 19; New York, (the Dublia of America,) 23.

San Francisco, 19; New York, (the Dublin of America,) 23.

See how the figures jump up, as soon as one arrives at the transatlantic list:
Paris, 27; Glasgow, 27; London, 28; Vienna, 28; Augsburg, 28; Braunachweig, 28; Konigsberg, 29; Cologne, 29; Dresden, 29; Hamburg, 29; Berlin, 30; Bombay, 30; Warssw, 31; Breslau, 31; Odessa, 32; Munich, 33; Strasburg, 33; Peeth, 35; Cassel, 35; Lisbon, 36; Liverpool, 36; Prague, 37; Madras, 37; Bucharest, 39; St. Peteraburg, 40; Trieste, 40; Alexandria, (Egypt,) 43; Dublin, 48; Caloutta, 55.

Edinburgh is as healthy as New York—23; but there is no 'city' in the entire list which but there is no 'city' in the entire list which is healthier, except Frankfort-on-the-Main—20. But Frankfort is not as healthy as Chicago, San Francisco, St. Louis, or Philadelphia.

Perhaps a strict average of the world might develop the fact that where 1 in 1,000 of America's population dies, 2 in 1,000 of the other populations of the earth aucoumb. I do not like to make insinuations, but I do think the above statistics darkly suggest that these people over here drink this detectable water on the sly.

We climbed the moraine on the opposite side of the glacier, and then orept along its sharp ridge a hundred yards or so, in pretty constant danger of a tumble to the glacier below." The fall would have been only 100 feet, but it would have closed me out as effectually as 1,000, therefore I respected the distuany as 1,000, therefore I respected the distance accordingly, and was glad when the trip was done. A moraine is an agly thing to assault head first. At a distance it looks like an endless grave of fine sand, accurately shaped and nicely smoothed; but close by, it is found to be made mainly of rough bowlders of all sizes, from that of a man's head to that of a cottage. Such an ent ?

ing face and rail BDO ònt ther bris Wor hog thin body do it upon hard did' twent hind:

OF,

had p We called It was large, usual and he the restock ; This w five m We

the h not se

Next the di If I re the as Five ( all ful days l regula rest of truste some ( dollar railwa his mi to the We

We W his n heaver made . Plebei As I

The tables yped, they yere based average of for a year. Ith her 38 ation (year-stant with—and so encod general site our towns ur cities. y American bles : pulation ant. Louis, 18;, (the Dublin

Londov, 28; sraunschweig, 29; Dresden, 30; Odessa, 32; Pesth, 35; averpool, 36; harest, 39; St.; Alexandria, cutta, 55. New York—23; ntire list which on the Main—as healthy as ouis, or Philalist of the world there 1 in 1,000 , 2 in 1,000 of earth succumb. mustions, but I darkly suggest rink this detest-

on the opposite a crept along its or so, in pretty a to the glacier e been only 100 i ms out as effectively of the control of Buch an eus .

By and by we came to the 'Mauvais Pas, or, the Villainous Road, to translate it feelingly. It was a break-neck path around the face of a precipice forty or fifty feet high, and nothing to liang on to but some iron railings. I got along, slowly, safely, and uncomfortably, and finally reached the middle. My hopes began to rise a little, but they were quickly blighted; for there I met a hog—a long-nosed bristly fellow, that held up his snout and worked his nostrils at me inquiringly. A hog on a pleasure exoursion in Switzerlahd—think of it. It is striking and unusual; a body might write a poem about it. He could not retreat, if he had been disposed to do it. It would have been foolish to stand upon our dignity in a please where there was hardly room to stand upon our feet, so we did nothing of the sort. There were twenty or thirty ladies and gentlemen behind us, we all turned and went back, and the hog followed behind. The creature did not seem set up by what he had done; he had probably done it before.

We reached the restaurant on the height called the Chapeau at 4 in the afternoon. It was a memento-factory, and the stock was large, cheap and varied. I bought the usual paper-outer to remember the place by, and had Mont Blane and Mauvais Pas, and the rest of the region branded on my alpenstock; then we descended to the valley, and walked home without being tied together. This was not dangerous, for the valley was five miles wide, and quite level.

We reached the hotel before 9 o'clock. Next morning we left for Geneva on top of the diligence, under shelter of a gay awning. If I remember rightly, there were more than twenty people up there. It was so high that the ascent was made by ladder. The huge vehicle was full everywhere, inside and out. Five other diligences left at the same time, all full. We had engaged our seats two days beforehand, to make sure, and paid the regulation price, five dollars each; but the rest of the company were wiser; they had trusted Baedeker, and waited; consequently some of them got their seats for one or two dollars. Baedeker knows all about hotels, railway and diligence companies, and speaks his mind freely. He is a trustworthy friend to the traveller.

We never saw Mont Blanc at his best until we were many miles away; then he lifted his majestic proportions high into the heavens, all white and cold and selemn, and made the rest of the world seem little and plebeian, and cheap and trivial.

As he passed out of sight at last, an old

Englishman settled himself in his seat, and

"Well, I am antisfied, I have seen the principal features of Swiss scenery—Mont Blanc and the goitre—new for home !" """

CHAPTER XLVII, 11'1 ELBIL A

We spent a few placeant, restful days at Geneva, that delightful city where assurate time-pieces are made for all the rest of the world, but whose own clocks never give the correct time of day by any accident.

Geneva is filled with pretty little shops, and the shops are filled the most enticing gimerackery, but if one enters one of these places he is at once pounced upon, and followed up, and so persecuted to they this, that, and the other thing, that he is very grateful to get out again, and is not at all apt to repeat his experiment. The shop-keepers of the smaller sort, in Geneva, are as troublesome and persistent as are the salesmen of that monster hive in Paris, the Grands Magasins du Louvre—an establishment where ill-mannered pestering, pursuing and insistence have been reduced to a soience.

In Gene a, prices in the smaller shops are very elastic—that is another bad feature. I was looking in at a window at a very pretty string of beads, suitable for a child. I was only admiring them; I had no use for them; I hardly ever wear beads. The shopwoman came out and offered them to me for 35 france. I said it was cheap, but I did not need them.

Ah, but monsieur, they are so beautiful? I confessed it, but said they were not suitable for one of my age and simplicity of character. She darted in and brought them out and tried to force them into my hands, saying.

ing,—
'Ah, but only see how lovely they are !
Surely monsionr will take them; monsiour shall have them for 30 france. There, I have said it—it is a loss, but one must live."

I dropped my hands, and tried to move her to respect my unprotected situation. But no, she daugled the beads in the sun before my face, exciaiming, 'Ah, monaieur cannot resist them!' She hung them on my coat button, folded her hands resignedly, and said, 'Gone—and for: 30 francs, the lovely things—it is incredible!—but the good God will sanctify the sacrifice to me.

things—it is incredible!—but the good God will sanctify the sacrifice to me.

I removed them gently, returned them, and walked away, shaking my head and smiling a smile of silly embarrassment while the passers-by halted to observe. The woman leaned out of her door, shook her beads, and screamed after me,— ' Monsieur shall have them for 28!'

1. 3. 4 1 5 . v . 15 85 4

Twenty-aven! It is a cruel loss, it is ruin-but take them, only take them.

I still research; still wagging my head.

There, I have said it. Come!

I waggist another negative. A nurse and a little English girl had been near me, and were following me now. The shopwoman ran to the nurse, thrust the beads into her hands, and eaid:

hands, and ead :—
'Monsieur shall have them for 20! Take them to the hotel—he shall send me the money to morrow—next day—when he likes.' Then to the child: 'When thy father sends me the money, come thou also, my angel, and thou shalt have something, oh, so protty !

I was thus providentially exved. The nurse refused the beads squarely and firmly, and that ended the matter.

The 'sights' of Geneva are not numerous. I made one attempt to hunt up the houses once inhabited by those two disagreeable people, Rousseau and Calvin, but had no success. Then I concluded to go home. I found that it was easier to propo that than to do it; for that town is a be-wildering place. I got lost in a tangle of narrow and orocked streets, and stayed lost for an hour or two. Finally I found a street which looked somewhat familiar, and said to myself, 'Now I am at home, I judge.' But I was wrong; this was 'Hett street.' Presently I found another place which had a 'amiliar look, and said to myself, 'Now I am at home, sure. It was another error. This was 'Puryatory street,' After a little I vaid. Now I've got to the right place, any.: way....no, this is 'Peradies street;' I'm further from home than I was in the beginping.' Those were queer names-Calvin was the author of them, likely. 'Hell' and 'Purgatory' fitted those two streets like a glove, but the 'Paradise' appeared to be sarcastic.

I came out on the lake front, at last, and then I knew where I was. I was walking along before the glittering jewellery shops when I saw a curious performance. A lady passed by, and a trim dandy lounged across the walk in such an apparently carefully-timed way as to bring himself exactly in front of way as to bring himself exactly in front of her when she got to him. He made no offer to step out of the way; he did not apologies, he did not even notice her. She had to stop still and let him lounge by. I wondered if he had done that piece of brutality purperly ly. He strolled to a chair and scated himself at a small table; two or three other males were sitting at similar tables sipping ewestened water. I waited; presently a youth came by, and this fallow got up and served him the same trick. Still, it did not near possible that any one could do such a thing deliberately. To satisfy my curiosity I went around the block, and sure enough as I approached at a good round speed he got up and lounged lanily across my path, fouling my course exactly at the right moment to receive all my weight. This proved that his previous performance, had not been accidental, but intentional.

" (12 His. 20)

I saw that dandy's ourious game played ud

ti fi

Y

34

and (que over the property of the property of dental, but intentional.

I saw that dandy's ourious game played afterwards in Paris, but not for amusement; not with a motive of any sort, indeed, but simply from a selfah indifference to other people's comforts and rights. One does not see it as frequently in Paris as he might expect to, for there the law mays, in effect, 'it' is the business of the weak to get out of the way of the strong.' We fine a cabman if he runs over a citizen; Paris fine the citizen for being run over. At least so everybody says—but I saw something which caused me to doubt; I saw a horseman run over an old woman one day—the police arrested him and took him away. That looked as if they meant to punish him.

police arrested him and took him away.
That looked as if they meent to punish him.
It will not do for me to find merit in American manners—for are they not the standing butt for the jests of critical and poliched Europe? Still I must venture to claim one little matter of superiority in our manners: a lady may traverse our streets all day, going and coming as she bhooses, and she will never be molested by any man; but if a lady, unattended, walks abroad in the streets of London, even at noonday, she will be pretty likely to be accosted and in-sulted—and not by drunken sailors, but by men who carry the look and wear the dress of gentlemen. It is maintained that these of gentlemen. It is maintained that these people are not gentlemen, but are a lower sort, disguised as gentlemen. The case of Colonel Valentine Baker obstructs that argument, for a man cannot become an officer in the British army except he helds the rank of gentleman. This person, finding himself alone in a railway compartment with an unprotected girl—but it is an atrooious story, and doubtless the reader remembers it well enough. London must have been more or less accustomed to Bakera, and the ways of Baker, else London would have been offended, and excited. Baker was "imprisoned" ed, and excited. Baker was "imprisoned" —in a parlour; and he could not have been more visited, or more overwhelmed with attentions if he had committed six murders and then—while the gallows was preparing —'got religion'—after the manner of the holy Charles Pesce, of saintly memory. Ar-kansaw—it seems a little indelicate to be trumpeting forth our own superiorities, and ot up and do such a y ouriculty path, for proved that me played indeed. b os to other one does not se might exin effect, 'it's get out of We fine tisen; Paris rer. At least me day—the k him away. punish him. nd merit in hey not the oritical and venture to aperiority in she chooses. by any man; ks abroad in noonday, she ailors, but by wear the dress ed that these The case of ruote that ar-

ree our streets

holds the rank nding himself at with an unrocions story, embers it well been more or d the ways of we been offend-

"imprisoned" not have been elmed with at-d six murders was preparing manner of the memory. Ar-adelicate to be periorities, and comparisons are always odious, but still— 'Arkanew' would certainly have hanged Paker.' I do not say she would have tried him first, but she would have hanged him, anyway.

Even the most degraded woman can walk our streets unapoisted, her sax and weakness being her sufficient protection. She will encounter less polish than she would in the old world, but she will run sorous enough humanity to make up for it.

The music of a dopkey swoke us early in the morning, and we rose up and made ready for a pretty formidable walk—to Italy; but the road was so level that we took the train.

for a pretty formidable walk—to Italy; but the road was so level that we took the train. We lost a good deal of time by this, but it was no matter, we were not in a hurry. We were four hours going to Chambery. The Swiss trains go upwards of three miles an hour, in places, but they are quite safe.

That aged Freuch town of Chambery was as quaint and crooked as Heilbronn. A drowsy reposeful quiet reigned in the back streets which made strolling through them very pleasant, barring the almost unbearable heat of the sun. In one of these streets which was eight feet wide, gracefully curved and built up with small antiquated house, I saw three fat hous lying asleep, and a boy (also asleep) taking care of them. From queer old-fashioned windows along the curve, projected boxes offbright flowers, and over the edge of these boxes hung the head and shoulders of a cat asleep. The five sleeping creatures were the only five sleeping creatures were the only living things visible in that street. There was not a sound, absolute stillness prevailed. It was Sunday; one is not used to such dreamy Sundays on the continent. In our part of the town it was different that night. A regiment of brown and battered soldiers had arrived home from Algiers, and soldiers had arrived home from Algiers, and I judged they got thirsty on the way. They sang and drank till dawn, in the pleasant open air.

We left for Turin at tem the next morning by a railway which was profusely decorated with tunnels. We forgot to take a lantern along, consequently we missed all the somery. A ponderous tow-headed Swiss woman who put on any fine-lady size hat was evidently more many fine-lady airs, but was evidently more used to washing linen than wearing it, sat in used to washing linen than wearing it, ast in a corner seat and put her legs across into the epposite one, propping them intermediately with her up-ended valise. In the seat thus pirated, ast two Americans, greatly in-commoded by that woman's majestic orfilm-clad feet. One of them begged her politely, to remove them. She opened her wide eyes and gave him a stare, but ans-wered nothing. By and by he preferred his request again, with great respectfulness. She said, in good English, and in a deeply offended tone, that she had paid her passage and was not going to be bullied out of her 'rights' by ill-bred foreigners, even if she was alone and unprotected.

'But I have my right also, madam. My ticket entitles me to a seat, but you are occupying half of it.'

I will not talk with you, sir. What right have you to speak to me? I do not know you. One would know you came from a land where there are no gentlemen. No gentleman would treat a lady as you have treated me.'

'I come from a region where a lady would

'I come from a region where a lady would hardly give me the same provocation.'
'You have insulted me, sir! You have intimated that I am not a lady—and I hope I am not one, after the pattern of your coun-

I beg that you will give yourself no alarm on that head, madam; but at the same time I must insist—always respectfully—that you let me have my seat.

'I never was so insulted before? Never! never! It is shameful, it is brutal, it is base, to bully and abuse an unprocessed lady who has lost the use of her limbs and cannot put her feet to the floor without agony l' Good heavens, madam, why didn't you say that at first! I offer a thousand pardons. And I offer them most sincerely. I did not know—I could not know—that anything was the matter. You are most wellcome to the seat, and would have been from the first if I had only known. I am truly sorry it all happened, I do assure you."

But he couldn't get a word of forgiveness

But he couldn't get a word of forgiveness out of her. She simply sobbed and anuffled in a subdued but wholly unappeasable way for two long hours, meantime crowding the man more than ever with her undertaker-furniture and paying no sort of attention to his frequent and humble little efforts to do something for her comfort. Then the train halted at the Italian line sand her hand wanted word the send she hopped up and marched out of the car with as firm a leg as any washerwoman of all her tribe! And how sick I was, to see how she had fooled me.

Turin is a very fine city. In the matter of roominess it transcends anything that wa ever dreamed of before, I fancy. It site ever dreamed of before, I hancy. It are in the midst of a vast dead-level. and one is obliged to imagine that land may be had for the asking, and no taxes to pay, so lavishly do they use it. The streets are extravagantly wide, the paved squares are prodigious, the houses are huge and handsome, and compacted into uniform blecks that stretch away as straight as an arrow, into the distance. The sidewalks are route wide as ordinary European streets, and are covered over with a double arcade supported on great atone piers or columns. One walks from one end to the other of these spacious streets, under the shelter all the time, and all his course is lined with the puettiest of shope and the most inviting dining-houses.

There is a wide and lengthy court, glittering with the most wickedly enticing shops, which is roofed with glass, high aloft over head, and paved with soft-toned marbles taid in graceful figures; and at night when this place is brilliant with gas and populous with a sauntering and chatting and laughing multitude of pleasure-seekers, it is a spectacle worth seeing.

Everything is on a large scale; the public buildings, for instance—as they are architecturally imposing, too, as well as large. The big squares have big bronze monuments in them. At the hotel they gave a rooms that were alarming, for size, and a parlour to match. It was well the weather required no fire in the parlour, for I think one might as well have tried to warm a park. The place would have a warm look, though, in any weather, for the window ourtains were of red silk damask and the walls were covered with same fire hued goods—so, also, were the four sofas and the brigade of chairs. The furniture, the ornaments, the chandeliers, the cappets, were all new and bright and costly. We did no tneed a parlour at all but they said it belonged to the two bedrooms, and we might use it if we chose. Since it was to continuing, we were not averse from using it, of course.

Turin must surely read a good deal, for it has more book stores to the square rod than any other town I know of. And it has its own share of military folk. The Italian officers' uniforms are very much the most beautiful I have ever seen; and as a general thing the men in them were as handsome as the clothes. They were not large men, but they had fine forms, fine features, rich olive complexions and lustrous black eyes.

For several weeks I had been culling all the information I could about Italy, from tourists. The tourists were all agreed upon one thing—one must expect to be cheated at every turn by the Italians. I took an evening walk in Turin, and presently came across a little Punch and Judy show in one of the great squares. Twelve or fifteen people constitute an audience. This minature theatre was not much bigger than a man's coffin stood on end; the upper part was open and displayed a tinseled parlour—a good-sized handkershief would have answered for a drop-curtain; the footlights consisted of a couple of candle-ends an inch long; various manikins the size of dolls appeared on the stage and made long speeches at each other, gesticulating a good deal, and they generally had a light before they got through. They were worked by strings from above, and the illusion was not perfect, for one saw not only the strings, but the brawny hand that manipulated them—and the actors and actresses all talked in the same voice, too. The audience stood in front of the theatre, and seemed to snipy the performance heartily.

m

to m re fo

os sir ot

Gı

le

ag th

OU

it all ne ke with va to two hot of the without work hot of the without work a without he will be a will be will be a will when the play was done, a youth in his shirt-sleeves started around with a small copper saucer to make a collection. I did not know how much to put in, but thought I would be guided by my predecessors. Unluckily I only had two of these and they did not help me much because they did not put in anything. I had no Italian money, so I put in a small Swiss coin worth about ten cents. The youth finished his collection-trip and emptied the result on the stage; he had some very animated talk with the concealed manager; then he came working his way through the little crowd—seeking me' I thought. I had a mind to slip away, but concluded I wouldn't; I would stand my ground and confront the villainy, whatever it was. The youth stood before me and held up that Swiss coin, sure enough, and said something. I did not understand him, but I judged he was requiring Italian money of me. The crowd gathered close, to listen. I was irritated, and said,—in English, of course,—

'I know it's Swiss, but you'll take that or none. I haven't any other.'

He tried to put the coin in my hand, and spoke again. I drew my hand away, and

'No, sir. I know all about you people. You can't play any of your fraudful tricks on me. If there is a discount on that coin, I am sorry, but I am not going to make it good. I notice that some of the audience didn't pay you anything at all. You let them go, without a word, but you come after me because you think me a stranger and will put up with an extortion rather than have a soene. But you are mistaken this time—you'll take that Swiss money or none.'

The youth stood there with the coin in his fingers nonplussed, and bewildered; of course he had not understood a word. An English-speaking Italian spoke np, now, and said.

'You are misunderstanding the boy. He does not mean any harm. He did not suppost ogyou i gave ichimas so much money good-sized purposely, has he hurried hack to repurposely, too he hurried hack to return dyou the coin lest you might get away before you discovered your mistake. Take it, and give him as penny—that will make everything smooth agair."

I probably blushed, then, for there was cocasion. Through the interpreter I begged the boy's pardon, but I nobly refused to take back the cents. I said I was accurate med to equandering large sums in that ered for a ng; various ered on the each other, ey generally gh. They way-it was the kind of person I was. Then I retired to make a note to the effect that in Italy, persons connected with the drams do not cheat.

The episode with the showman reminds me of a dark chapter in my history. I once robbed an aged and blind beggar-woman of four dollars—in a church. It happened in this way. When I was out with the Innocents Abroad, the ship stopped in the Russian part of Odessa, and I went ashore with others, to view the town. I got separated from the rest, and wandered about alone, until late in the afternoon, when I entered a Greek church to see what it was like. When I was ready to leave, I observed two wrinkled old women standing stiffly upright against the inner wall, near the door, with their brown palms open to receive alms. I contributed to the nearer one, and passed out : I had gone fifty yards, perhaps, when it occurred to me that I must remain ashore all night, as I had heard that the ship's business would carry her away at 4 o'clock and keep her way until morning. It was a little after 4. now. I had come ashore with only two pieces of money, both about the same size, but differing largely in value—one was a French gold piece worth four dollars, the other a Turkish coin worth two cents and a half. With a sudden and horrified misgiving, I put my hand in my pocket, now, and, sure enough, I fetched out that Turkish penny!

Here was a situation. A hotel would require pay in advance—I must walk the streets all night, and perhaps be arrested as a suspicious character. There was but one way out of the difficulty—I flew back to the church, and softly entered. There stood the old woman yet, and in the palm of the nearest one still lay my gold piece. I was grateful. I crept close, feeling unspeakably mean; I got my Turkish penny ready, and was extending a trembling hand to make the nefarious exchange, when I heard a cough behind me. I jumped back as if I had been accused, and stood quaking while a worshipper entered and passed up the aisle.

money; that is, it seemed a year, though of course, it must have been much less. The worshippers went and come; there were hardly ever three in the crurch at once, but there was always one of more. Every time I tried to commit my crime somebody came in or somebody started out, and I was prevented; but at last my opportunity came to one morest there was no and I was prevented; but at last my oppor-tunity came; for one moment there was no-body in the church but the two beggar-women and me. I whipped the gold piece out of the poor old pauper's palm and drop-ped my Turkish penny in its place. Poor old thing, she murmured her thanks—they smote me to the heart. Then I sped away in a guilty hurry, and even when I was a mile from the church I was still glancing back, every moment, to see if I was being back, every moment, to see if I was being

That experience has been of priceless value and benefit to me; for I resolved then, that as long as I lived I would never again rob a blind beggar-woman in a church; and I have always kept my word. The most permanent lessons in morals are those which come, not of book teaching, but of experience.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

In Milan we spent most of our time in the vast and beautiful Arcade or Gallery, or whatever it is called. Blooks of tall new buildings of the most sumptuous sort, rich with decoration and graced with statues, the streets between these blocks roofed over with glass at a great height, the pavements all of smooth and variegated marble, arranged in tasteful patterns—little tables all over these marble streets, people sitting at them, eating, drinking, or amoking-orowds of other people strolling by—such is the Arcade. I should like to live in it all the time. The windows of the sumptnous restaurants stand open, and one breakfasts there and enjoys the passing show. We wandered all over the town, enjoying whatever was going on in the streets. We took one omnibus ride, and as I did not speak Italian and could not ask the price, I held out some copper coins to the conductor, and he took two. Then he went and got his tariff-card, and showed me that he had taken only the right sum. So I made a note

Italian conductors do not cheat. Near the Cathedral I saw another inst of probity. An old man was peddling dolls and toy fans. Two small American children bought fans, and one gave the old man a franc and three copper coins, and both started away; but they were called back, and the franc and one of the coppers I was there a year trying to steal that | were restored to them. Hence it is plain the coin in his newildered; of a word. An e up, now, and ve, and the d that manand actress-

heatre, and heartily.

outh in his

th a small ion. I did but thought essors. Un-

did not put money, so I h about ten ollection-trip

e stage; he with the con-

working his

wd-seeking would stand

illainy, what-

before me and

enough, and derstand him.

Italian money

ose, to listen. English, of

'll take that

my hand, and

d away, and

t you people.

adful tricks on that coin, I to make it

the audience all. You let at you come

a stranger and

rather than mistaken this as money or

too. The

g the boy. He 占

that in Italy, parties connected with the drama and with the omnibus and toy in-

The stocks of goods in the shops were not extensive, generally. In the vectibule of what seemed to be a clothing store, we saw eight or ten wooden dummies grouped together, clothed in woollen business-suits and each suit marked with its price. One suit was marked 45 francs—nine dollars. Harris stepped in and said he wanted a suit like that Nothing easier: the old merchant dragged in the dummy, brushed him off with a broom, stripped him, and shipped the clothes to the hotel. He said he did not keep two suits of the same kind in stock, but manufactured a second when it was needed to re-clothe the dummy.

In another quarter we found six Italians engaged in a violent quarrel. They danced fiercely about gestioniating with their heads, their arms, their legs, their whole bodies; they would rush forward occasionally in a sudden access of passion and shake their fists in each other's very faces. We lost half an hour there, waiting to help cord up the dead, but they finally embraced each other affectionately, and the trouble was all over. The episode was interesting, but we could not have afforded all that time to it if we had known nothing was going to come of it but a reconciliation. Note made—in Italy, people who quarrel cheat the spectator.

We had another disappointment, afterward. We approached a deeply interested crowd, and in the midst of it, found a fellow wildly chattering and gesticulating over a box on the ground which was covered with a piece of old blanket. Every little while he would bend down and take hold of the edge of the blanket with the extreme tips of his fingers, as if to show there was no deception—chattering away all the while—but always, just as I was expecting to see a wonderful feat of legerdemain, he would let go the blanket and rise to explain further. However, at last he uncovered the box and got out a spoon with a liquid in it, and held it fair and frankly around, for people to see that it was all right and he was taking no advantage—his chatter became more excited than ever. I supposed he was going to set fire to the liquid and swallow it, so I was gradualy wrought up and interested. I got a cent ready in one hand and a florin in the other, intending to give him the former if he survived and the latter if he killed himself—for his loss would be my gain in a literary way, and I was willing to pays fair price for the sem—but this imposter ended his intensely moving performance by simply adding some powder to the liquid and polishing the spoon !

Thus he held it aloft, and he could not have shown a wilder exultation if he had achieved an immortal miracle. The crowd applicated in a gratified way, and it seemed to me that history speaks the truth when it says these children of the south are easily entertained.

nt nb

P

y ji

A.L

ti

ti

di so di

yo

th bu

it,

be

fel

qu pr wo ba tiv fro Ol at Mi fri bu th

ooi th Ol fac

ha wì

m

W

We spent an impressive hour in the noble cathedral, where long shafts of tinted light were cleaving through the solemn dimness from the lofty windows and falling on a pillar here, a picture there, and a kneeling worshipper youder. The organ was muttering, censers were awinging, candles were glittering on the distant altar, and robed priests were filing silently past them; the scene was one to sweep all frivolous thoughts away and steep the soul in a holy calm. A trim young American lady passed a yard or two from me, fixed her eyes on the mellow sparks flecking the far-off altar, bent her head reverently a moment, then straightened up, kicked her train into the air with her heel, caught it defuly in her hand, and marched briskly out.

We visited the picture galleries and the other regulation "eights" of Milan—not because I wanted to write about them again, but to see if I had learned anything in twelve years. I afterwards visited the great galleries of Rome and Florence for the same purpose. I found I had learned one thing. When I wrote about the Old Masters before, I said the copies were better than the original." That was a mistake of large dimensions. The Old Masters were still unpleasing to me, but they were truly divine contrasted with the copies. The copy is to the original as the pallid, smart, inane new wax-work-group is to the vigorous, earnest, dignified group of living men annd women whom ait professes to duplicate. There is a mellow richness, a subdued colour, in the old pictures, which is to the eye what muffled and mellowed sound is to the ear. That is the merit which is most loudly praised in the old picture, and is the one which the copy most conspicuously lacks, and which the copyist must not hope to compass. It was generally conceded by the artists with whom I talked that that subdued splendour, that mellow richness, is imparted to the picture by age. Then why should we worship the Old Mas-ter for it; who didn't impart it, instead of worshipping Old Time, who did ? / Perhaps the picture was a clanging bell, until Time muffled it and sweetened it.

In conversation with an artist in Venice, I asked 3

· What is it that people see in the Old

THE LATT A

he spoon ! not have rowd apseemed to whon it are easily

r in the the solemn and falling d a kneelorgan .was g, candles altar, and past them; l in a holy ady paused eyes on the altar, bent en straighthe air with hand, and ies and the Milan-not them again, ng in twelve great gal-for the same one thing. sters before, n the origidimensions. easing to me, trasted with e original as work-group nified group whom at is a mellow old pictures, an i mellowis the merit the old picne copy most h the copyist was generally hom I talked that mellow ture by age. the Old Masit, instead of ? Perhaps ll, until Time

t in Venice, I o in the Old

Mastera ? I have been in the Doges', Palace and I saw several acres of very bad drawing, very bad perspective, and very incorrect proportions. Paul Veronese's dogs do not resemble dogs; all the horses look like bladders on legs; one man had a right leg on the left side of his body; in the large picture where the Em-peror (Barbarossa?) is prostrate before the Pope, there are three men in the foreground who are over thirty feet high, if one may judge by the size of a kneeling little boy in the centre of the foreground; and according to the same scale, the Pope is 7 feet high and the Doge is a shriveled dwarf of 4 feet.

The artist said 'Yes, the Old Masters often drew badly ; they did not care much for truth and exactness in minor details; but after all, in spite of bad drawing, bad perspective, bad propor-tions, and a choice of subjects which no longer appeal to people as strongly as they did three hundred years ago. there is a something about their pictures which is divine-a something which is above and beyond the art of any epoch since—a some-thing which would be the despair of artists but that they never hope or expect to attain it, and therefore do not worry about it.

That is what he said—and he said what he believed; and not only believed, but felt.

Reasoning-especially reasoning without technical knowledge—must be put aside, in cases of this kind. It cannot assist the incases of this kind. quirer. It will lead, in the most logical progression, to what, in the eyes of artists, would be a most illogical conclusion. Thus: bad drawing, bad proportion, bad perspective indifference to truthful detail, colour which gets its merit from time, and not from the artist, these things constitute the Old Master; conclusion, the Old Master was a bad painter, the old Master was not an Old Master at all, but an Old Apprentice. Your friend the artist will grant your premises, but deny your conclusion; he will maintain that notwithstanding this formidable list of confessed defects, there is still a something that is divine and unapproachable about the Old Master, and that there is no arguing the fact away by any system of reasoning whatever.

I can believe that. There are women who have an indefinable charm in their faces which makes them beautiful to their intimates; but a cold stranger who tried to reason the matter out and find this beauty would fail. He would say of one of these women: This chin is too short, this note is too long, this forehead is too high, this hair is too red, this complexion is too pallid, the perspective of the entire composition is incorect; conclusion, the woman is not beautiful. But her nearest friend might say, and say truly, 'Your premises are right, your logis is faultless, but your conclusion is wrong. nevertheless: she is an old Master she is beautiful, but only to such as know her; it is a beauty which cannot be formulated, but it is there, just the same.' ...

I found more pleasure in contemplating the Old Masters this time than I did whom I was in Europe in former years, but still it was a calm pleasure; there was nothing over-heated about it. When I was in Venice before, I think I found no picture which stirred me much, but this time there were two which enticed me to the Doge's palace day after day, and kept me there hours at a time. One or these was Tintoretto's three acre picture, in the Great Council Chamber. When I saw it twelve years ago I was not atrongly attached to it—the guide told me it was an insurrection in heaven-but this Was an error.

The movement of this great work is very the Bereare ten thousand figures, and then as all doing something. There is a was a said 'go' to the whole composition Some of the figures are diving headlong downward, with clasped hands, others are swimming through the cloud-shoals, -some on their faces, some on their backs-great procession of bishops, martyrs and angels are pouring swiftly centrewards from various outlying directions -everywhere is enthusiastic joy, there is rushing movement every-where. There are fifteen or twenty figures scattored here and there, with books, but they cannot keep, their attention on their reading—they offer the books to others, but The lion of St. no one wishes to read now. Mark is there with his book ; St. Mark is there with his pen uplifted; he and the Lion are looking each other earnestly in the face, disputing about the way to spell a word— the Lion looks up in wrapt admiration while St. Mark spells. This is wonderfully interpressed by the artist.

It is the master-stroke of this incomparable painting.

I visited the place daily, and never grew tired of looking at that grand picture. As I have intimated the movement is almost unimaginably vigorous; the figures are singing. hosannahing, and many are blowing trum-pets. So vividly is noise suggested, that spectators who became absorbed in the picture almost always fall to shouting comments in each other's ears, making ear-trumpets of their curved hand, fearing they may not; otherwise be heard. One often sees a tourist, with the eloquent tears pouring down his cheeks, funnel his hands at his wife's ear, and hears him roar through them
O, TO BE THERE AND AT REST!

None but the supremely great in the art can produce effects like these with the tilent brush, were grant on a same a seek.

Twelve years ago I could not have appreciated this picture.

One year ago I could not have appreciated it. My study of Art in Heidelburg has been a nol beeducation to me. All that I am to-day in Art, I owe to that

The other great work which fascicated me was Bassano's immortal Hair Trunk.—
This is in the Chamber of the Council of Ten. It is in one of the threefoot pictures which decorate the walls of the room. The composition of this picture is beyond praise. The Hair Trunk is not hurled at the stranger's head—so to speak—as the chief feature of an immortal work so often is:
no, it is autordinated, it is restrained, it is most defily and eleverly held in receive, it is most cautiously and ingeniously led up to, by the master, and consequently when the spectator reaches it at last, he is taken unawares, he is unprepared, and it bursts upon him with a stucefying surprise.

One is lost in wonder at all the thought and care which this elaborate planning must have cost. A general glance at the picture could never suggest that there was a hair trunk in it; the Hair Trunk is not mentioned in the title even—which is, "Pope Alexander III and the Doge Ziani, the Conqueror of the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa; you as, the title is actually utilized to held divert attention from the Trunk; thus, as I say, nothing suggests the presence of the Trunk, by any hint, yet everything studiedly leads up to it, step by step. Let us examine into this, and observe the exquisitely

At the extreme left end of the picture are a couple of women, one of them with a child looking over her shoulder at a wounded man sitting with bandaged head on the ground. These people seem needless, but no, they are there for a purpose; one cannot look at them without seeing the gorgeous procession of grandees, bishops, halberdiers, and banner-bearers which is passing along behind them; one cannot see the procession without feeling a curiosity to follow it and learn whither it is going; it leads him to the Pope, in the centre of the picture, who is talking with the bonnetlessDoge—talking tranquilly, too, although within 12 feet of them a man is beating a drum, and not far from the drummer two persons are blowing horns, and many horsemen are plunging and rioting about-indeed, 22 feet of this great work is all a deep and happy holiday serenity and Sunday Sahool procession, and then we come suddenly upon 112 feet of turmoil and racket and insubordination. This latter state of things is not an accident, it has its purpose. But for it, one would linger upon the Pope and the Doge, thinking them to be the motive and supreme sature of the picture; whereas one is draw long, almost unconsciously, to see what the trouble is about. Now at the very end of this riot, within 4 feet of the end of the picture, and full 36 feet from the beginning of it, the Hair Trunk burets with an electrifying suddenness upon the epectator, in all its matchless perfection, and the great master's triumph is sweeping and complete. From that moment no other thing in those forty feet of canvas has any charm; one sees the Hair Trunk, and the Hair Trunk only—and to see it is to worship it." Bassano even placed objects in the immediate vicinity of the Supreme Feature whose pretended purpose was to divert attention from it yet a little longer and thus delay and augment the surprise; for instance, to the right of it he has placed a stooping man with a cap so red that it is sure to hold the eye for a moment—to the left of it, some 6 feet away, he has placed a red-coated man on an inflated horse, and that coat plucks your eye to that locality the next moment—then, between the Trunk and the red horse-man he bas intruded a man, naked to his waist, who is carrying a fancy flour sack on the middle of his back instead of on his shoulder—this admirable feat interests you, of course—keeps you at bay a little longer, like a sook, or a jacket thrown to the pursuing wolf—but at last, in spite of all distractions and detentions, the eve of even the most dull and heedless spectator is sure to fall upon the World's Masterpiece, and in that moment he totters to his. chair or leans upon his guide for support.

D. O

b

S W

Descriptions of such a work as this must necessarily be imperient, yet they are of value. The top of the trunk is arched; the arch is a perfect half circle, in the Roman style of architecture, for in the then rapid decadence of Greek art, the rising influence of Rome was already begining to be felt in the art of the Republic. The Trunk is bound or bordered with leather all around where the lid joins the main body. Many critics consider this leather too cold in tone; but I consider this its highest merit, since it was evidently made so to emphasize by contrast the impassioned fervour of the hasp. The high lights in this part of the work are cleverly managed, the motif is admirably subordinated to the ground tints, and the technique isvery fine. The brass nail-heads are in the:

purest style of the early renaissance. The strokes, here, are very firm and bold-every nail head is a portrait. The handle on the end of the Trunk has e idently been reteuched—I think, with a piece of chalk—but one can still see the inspiration of the Old Master in the tranquil, almost too tranquil, hang of it. The hair of this Trunk is real hair—so to speak—white in patches, brown in patches. The details are finely worked out; the repose proper to hair in a recombent and inactive attitude is charmingly expressed. There is a feeling about this part of the work which lifts it to the highest altitudes of art; the sense of sordid realism vanishes away—one recognizes that there is soul here. View this trunk as you will, it is a gem, it is a marvel, it is a miracle. Some of the effects are very daring, approaching even to the boldest flights of the recoco, the sirecco, and the Byzantine schools—yet the master's hand never faiters—it moves on, calm, majestic, confident—and with that art which conceals art, it finally casts over the tout ensemble, by mysterious methods of its own, a subtle something which refines, subdues, etherealizes the aird components and endues them with the deep charm and gracious witchery of meev.

at work is

renity and

n we come

a the Pope

e picture ; t unconscibout. Now in 4 feet of

6 feet from unk bursts upon the ection, and other thing ony charm; Hair Trunk it. Bassano diate vicin-

e pretended rom it yet a augment the

ght of it he

a cap so red

r a moment

way, he has

flated horse,

that locality the Trunk

intraded a

is carrying a

of his back

admirable eeps you at or a jacket entions, the

eedless spec-

ld's Masterotters to his.

they are of arched; the

the Roman

then rapid

to be felt in ink is bound

round where

Many oritics

tone; but I

since it was

by contrast sp. The high are cleverly

v subordinat.

technique is-

s are in the:

support.

Among the art tressures of Europe there are pictures which approach the Hair Trunk—there are two which may be said to equiit; possibly—but there are none that surpasses it. So perfect is the Hair Trunk that it moves even persons who ordinarily have no feeling for art. When an Erie baggage master saw it two years ago, he could hardly keep from checking it; and once when a customs inspector was brought into its presence, he gazed upon it in ailent rapture for some moments, then slowly and unconsciously placed one hand behind him with the palm uttermost, and got out his chalk with the other. These facts speak for themselves.

CHAPTER XLIX.

One lingers about the Cathedral a good deal, in Venice. There is a strong fascination about it—partly because it is so old, and partly because it is so ngly. Too many of the world's famous buildings fail of one chief virtue—harmony; they are made up of a methodless mixture of the ugly and the beautiful; this is bad; it is confusing, it is unrestful. One has a sense of uncasness, of distress, without knowing why. But one is calm before St. Mark, one is calm within it, one would be celm on top of it, celm in the cellar; for its details are masterfully ugly, no misplaced and impertinent beauties are intruded anywhere; and the consequent result is a grand harmorious whole, of soothing, entrancing, tranquilizing, soul-satisfying ugliness. One's admiration of a perfect thing always grows, never declines; and this is the surest evidence to him that it is perfect. St. Mark is perfect. To me it soon grew to be so nobly, so augustly ugly, that it was difficult to stay away from it, even for a little while. Every time its squat domes disappeared from my view, I had a despondent feeling; whenever they rasppeared, I falt an honeat rapture—I have not known ary happier hours than those I daily spent in front of Florian's, looking across the Great Square at it. Propped on its long row of low thick-legged columns, its back knobbed with domes, it seemed like a vast warty bug taking a meditative walk.

St. Mark is not the oldest building in the world, of course, but it seems the oldest, and looks the oldest—especially inside. When the ancient mosaics in its walls become damaged, they are repaired but not altered; the grotesque old pattern is pre-served. Antiquity has a charm of its own, and to smarten it up would only damage it. One day I was sitting on a red marble bench one day I was storing up at an ancient piece of apprentice-work, in mosaic, illus-trative of the command to multiply and replenish the earth.' The Cathedral itself had seemed very old; but this picture was illustrating a period in history which made the building seem young by comparison. But I presently found an antique which was older than either the battered Cathedral or the date assigned to that piece of history; it was a spiral-shaped fossil as large as the crown of a hat; it was embedded in the marble bench, and had been sat upon by tourists until it was worn smooth. Contrasted with the inconceivable antiquity of this modest fossil, those other things were flippantly modern—jejune—mere matters of day-before-yesterday. The sense of the oldness of the Cathedral vanished away under the influence of this truly venerable

St. Mark's is monumental; it is an imperishable remembrancer of the profound and simple piety of the Middle Ages. Whoever could ravish a column from a pagan temple did it and contributed his swag to this Christian one. So this fane is upheld by several hundred acquisitions procured in that peculiar way. In our day it would be immoral to go on the highway to get bricks for a church, but it was no sin in the old times. St. Mark's was itself the victim of a curious robbery, once. The thing is set down in the history of Venice, but it might be smugifed into the Arabian Nights and not seem out of place there.

Nearly four hundred and fifty years ago, a Candian named Stammato, in the suite of a prince of the house of Este, was allowed to view the riches of St. Mark. His sinful eye way dazzled, and he hid himself behind an atter, with an evil purpose in his heart, but a priest discovered him and turned him out. Afterward he got in again—by false keys, this time. He went in again—by false keys, this time. He went there, night after night, and worked hard and patiently, all alone, overcoming difficulty after difficulty with his toll, and at last shoceeded in removing a great block of the marble paneling which walled the lower part of the treasury; this block he fixed so that he could take it out and put it in at will. After that, for weeks, he spent all his midnights in his magnificent mine, inspecting it in security, gloating over its marvels at his leisure, and always alipping back to his obscure lodgings before dawn, with a duke's ransom under his cloak. He did not need to grab, haphazard, and run—there was no lurry. He could make deliberate and wellconsidered selections; he could consult his sathetic tastes. One comprehends how undisturbed he was, and how safe from any danger of interruption, when it is stated the he even carried off a unicorn's horn—a mere curiosity—which would not pass through the egress entire, but had to be sawn in two—a bit of work which cost him hours of tedious labour. He continued to store up his treasure at home until his occupation lost the charm of novelty and became monotonous; then he ceased from it, contented. Well he might be; for his collection, raised modern "values, represented nearly $50,000,000.

He could have gone home the richest citizen of his country, and it might have been years before the plunder was missed; but he was human-he could not enjoy his delight alone, he must have somebody to talk about it with. So he exacted a solemn oath from a Candian noble named Crioni, then led him to his lodgings and nearly took his breath away with a sight of his glittering hoard. He detected a look in his friend's frace which excited his auspicion, and was about to slip a stiletto into him when Crioni saved himself by explaining that that look was only an expression of supreme and happy astonishment. Stammato made Crioni a present of one of the State's principal jewels—a huge carbuncle, which afterward figured in the Ducal cap of State—and the pair parted. Crioni went at once to the palace, denounced Ducal cap of State—and the pair parted. a bordering bed of grease-scaked potatoes; Crioni went at once to the palace, denounced it is the size, shape and thickness of a man's the criminal, and handed over the carbuncle hand with the thumb and fingers cut off. It as evidence. Stammato was arrested, tried and condemned, with the old-time Venetian promptuess. He was hanged between the two great columns in the Piarsa—with a gilded rope, out of compliment to his love of gold, perhaps. He got no good of his booty at all—it was all recovered.

In Venice we had a luxury which very seldom fell to our lot on the continent a home dinner, with a private family. If one could always stop with private families, when travelling, Europe would have a charm which it now lacks. As it is, one must live in the hotels, of course, and that is a sorrowful business. A man accustomed to American food and American domestic cookery would not starve to death suddenly in Europe ; but I think he would gradually waste away, and eventually die, m tv ly et th

ho 80

in

hi

it th th

He would have to do without his accustomed morning meal. That is too formidable a change altogether; he would necessarily suf-fer from it. He could get the shadow, the sham, the base counterfeit of that meal: but that would do him no good, and money could not buy the reality.

To particularize: the average American's simplest and commonest form of breakfast consists of coffee and beefsteak; well, in Europe, coffee is an unknown beverage. You can get what the European hotel keeper thinks is coffee, but it resembles the real thing as hypocrisy resembles holiness. It is a feeble, characterless, uninspiring sort of stuff, and almost as undrinkable as if it had been made in an American hotel. The milk used for what the French call 'Christian' milk-milk which has been baptized.

After a few months' acquaintance with European 'coffee,' one's mind weakens, and his faith with it, and he begins to wonder if the rich beverage of home, with its clotted layer of yellow cream on top of it is not a dream after all, and a thing which never ex-

Next comes the European bread-fair enough, good enough, after a fashion, but cold; cold and tough, and unsympathetic; and never any change, never any varietyalways the same tiresome thing.

Next, the butter—the sham and tasteless butter; no salt in it, and made of goodness knows what.

Then there is a beefsteak. They have it in Europe, but they don't know how to cook it: Neither will they out it right. It comes on the table in a small, round, pewter platter. It lies in the centre of this platter, in ted, tried Venetian tween the with a his love of his booty

h very sel-nt—a home one could when tra-m which it live in the corrowful America u tery would urope; but away, and his accusformidable essarily sufhadow, the meal: but noney could

American's f breakfast k; well, in beverage. hotel keeper es the real iness. It is ring sort of The milk 1 Christian tized. ntance with reakens, and to wonder if 1 its clotted f it is not a ch never ex-bread-fair fashion, but ympathetic: ny variety-and tasteless of goodness

They have it how to cook nt. It comes pewter plat-nis platter, in ed potatoes; es of a man's racut off. It is a little ovordone, is rather dry, it tastes insipidly, it rouges no enthusiaem.

Imagine a poor exile contemplating that inert thing; and imagine an angel suddenly sweeping down out of a better land and setting before him a mighty porter-house steak an inch and a half thick, hot and sputtering from the griddle; dusted with fragrant pep-per; enriched with little melting bits of butter of the most unimpeachable freshness and genuineness; the precious juices of the meas trickling out and joining the gravy, ar-chipelagoed with mushrooms; a township or two of tender, vellowish fat gracing an outlying district of this ample county of beefsteak; the long white bone which divides the sirloin from the tenderloin still in its place; and imagine that the angel also adds a great oup of American home-made coffee, with the cream a froth on top, some real butter, firm and yellow and fresh, some smoking hot biscuits, a plate of hot buckwheat cakes, with transparent syrup—could words describe the gratitude of this exile?

The European dinner is better than the European breakfast, but it has its faults and inferiorities, —it does not satisfy. He comes to the table eager and hungry; he swallows his soup—there is an undefinable lack about it somewhere; thinks the fish is going to be the thing he wants-eats it and isn't sure ; thinks the next dish is perhaps the one that will hit the hungry place—tries it, and is conscious that there was a something want-ing about it, also. And thus he goes on, from dish to dish, like a boy after a butterfly which just misses getting caught every time, it alights, but somehow, doesn't get caught after all; and at the end the exile and the boy have fared about alike : the one is full but grievously unsatisfied, the other has had plenty of exercise, plenty of interest, and a fine lot of hopes, but he hasn't got any butterfly. There is here and there an American who will say he can remember rising from a European table a't 'n perfectly satisfied; but we must not o. .look the fact that there is also here and there an American who will lie.

The number of dishes is sufficient; but then it is such a monotonous variety oi unstraing dishes. It is an inane dead level of 'fair-to-middling.' There is nothing to accent it. Perhaps if the roast of mutton or of beef,—a big generous one—, were brought on the table and carved in full view of the client, that might give the right sense of earnestness and reality to the thing; but they don't do that, they pass the sliced meat around on a dish, and so you are perfeetly calm, it does not stir you in the least, Now a vast roast turkey, stretched on the broad of his back, with his heels in the air and the rich jucies oczing from his fat sides they would not know how to cook him. They can't even cook a chicken respectably; and as for carving it, they do that with a

This is about the customary table d'hote bill in summer : and

Soup, (characteriess.) in least wanteness.

Fish-sole, salmon, or whiting-usually tolerably good.

Roast-mutton or beef-tasteless-and some last year's potatoes, die

A pate, or some other made-dish-usually good—'considering,' and in state, and all alone—usually insipid lentils, or string beans, or indifferent asparagus.

Roast chicken, as tasteless as paper. Lettuce-salad tolerably good. Decayed strawberies or cheries, out of

Sometimes the apricets and figs are fresh, but this is no advantage, as these fruits are of no account anyway.

The grapes are generally good, and sometimes there is a tolerably good peach, by mistake.

The variations of the above bill are trifling. After a fortnight one discovers that the variations are only apparent, not real; in the third week you get what you had the first, and in the fourth week you get what you had the second. Three or four months of this weary sameness will kill the robustest appatite.

It has now been many months, at * 3 present writing, since I have had a nourishing meal, but I shall soon have one,—a modest, private affair, all to myself. I have selected a few dishes, and made out a little bili of fare, which will go home in the steamer that precedes me, and be hot when I arrive-as follows:

Radishes. Baked apples, with cream. Fried oysters; stewed oysters. Frogs. American coffee, with real cream, '" American butter. Fried chicken, Southern style. Porter-house steak. Saratoga potatoes. Broiled chicken, American style. Hot wheat bread, southern style, Hot biscuits, Southern style. Hot buck wheat cakes. American toast. Clear maple syrup, Virginia bacon, broiled. Blue points, on the half shell. Cherry-stone clame, san E 12 1 16 19 San Francisco mussels, steamed. Oyster soup. Clam soup.

in Oysters alreasted win shell - Northern nulling style of mend facts to make a correction and in mi Baltimore perch, wor'd as a binow wast Brok trout, from Sierra Nevadas.
Lake trout, from Tahoe.
Sheep-head and croakers, from New ided Orleans, reamet a. Black base from the Mississippi, or a light American roast beef, Roast turkey, Thanksgiving style. Cranberry sauce. Celery. Convertible Roset wild turkey. Woodcook.
Canvas-back-duck, from Baltimore. Prairie hena, from Illinois. 1 70 metacs A. Missouri partridges, broiled. Powam. Cook Burn Supples Boston bacon and beans, and is Bacon and greens, Sonthern style.
Hominy, Boiled onions, Turnipe. Pumpkin: Squash, Asparagus. Butter beans. Sweet potatoes in street Lettuce. Succotash. String beans.
Mashed potatoes. Cataup.
Boiled potatoes, in their skins. New potatoes, minus the skins. Early rose potatoes, rossted in the ashes,

Southern style, served hot. Sliced tomatoes, with sugar or vinegar. Stewed tomatoes, Green corn, but from the ear and served with butter and pepper.

Green corn, on the ear. Hot corn-pone, with chitlings, Southern atyle.

Hot hoe-cake, Southern style. Hot egg-bread, Southern style. Hot light-bread, Southern style. Buttermilk. I loed sweet milk. Apple dumplings, with real oream. Apple pie. Apple iritters.
Apple puffs, Southern style. Peach cobbler, Southern style. Peach pie. American minee pie. Pumpkin pie. Squash pie. All sorts of American pastry.

Fresh American fruits of all sorts, including strawberries which are not to be doled out as if they were jewelry, but in a more liberal way.

Ice-water—not prepared in the ineffectual goblet, but in the sincere and capable refrigerator.

Americans intending to spend a year or so in European hotels, will do well to copy this bill and carry it along. They will find it an excellent thing to get up an appetite with, in the dispiriting presence of the squalid table d'hote.

Foreigners cannot enjoy our food, 1 suppose, any more than we can enjoy theirs. It

I might glerify my bill of fare until I was tired; but after all, the Scotchman would shake his herd and any, "Where's your haggis ?' and the Fijian would sigh and say, gis? and the Fijian vould sigh and say, Wi are's year miscionary? I have a neat talent in matter pertaining to nourishment. This has met with professional recognition. I have aften furnished recipes for cook-books. Here are some designs for pies and things, which I recently prepared for a friend's projected cook-book, but as I forgot to furnish diagrams and perspectives, they had to be left out, of course. course :

RECIPE FOR AN ASH CAKE,

Take a lot of water and add it to a lot of coarse Indiau meal and about a quarter of a los of salt. Mix well together, kneed into the form of a 'pone,' and let the pone stand a while not on its edge, but the other way. Rake away a place among the embers, lay it there, and gover it an inch deep with hot ashes. When it is done, remove it; blow off all the ashes but one layer; butter that

N. B. No household should ever be withont this talisman. It has been noticed that tramps never return for another ash-cake,

RECIPE FOR NEW ENGLAND PIR.

To make this excellent breakfast ligh. proceed as follows : Take a sufficiency of water and a sufficiency of flour, and construct a bullet proof dough. Work this into the ferm of a disc, with the edges turned up some three-fourths of az much. Toughen and kiln-dry it a couple of days in a mild but unvarying temperature. Construct a cover for this redoubt in the same way and of the same material. Fill with stewed dried apples; aggravate with cloves, lemon real and slabs of citton; add tree, sections peal and slabs of citron; add two portions of New Orleans sugar, then solder on the lid and set in a safe place till it petrifies. Serve cold at breakfast and invite your enemy. on the second of the se

RECIPE FOR GERMAN GOFFEL

Take a barrel of water and bring it to a boil; rub a chiccory berry against a coffee berry, then convey the former into the water. Continue the boiling and evaporation until the intensity of the flavor and aroma of the coffee and chicory has been diminished to a proper degree; then set aside to cool. Now unharness the remains of a once cow from the plow, insert them in a hydraulic press, and then you shall have acquired a is not strange a for tastes are made not born, I teaspoonful of that pale blue juice which a until I was nan would s your hagh and say, pertaining with proten farnishe. are some h I recently cook-book, grams and left, out, of

B. il ymy!

it to a lot of quarter of a kneed, into pone stand e other waymbers, lay it sep with hot ve it; blow butter that ever be withnoticed that ash-cake,

D PIE.

eakfast 'inh, ufficiency of
r, and convork this inedges turned
h. Toughen
tys in a mild Construct a ame way and
with atewed
cloves, lemon
two portions older on the
it petrifies.
invite your

FFER.

and the state of the

bring it to a gainst a coffee ato the water. coration until aroma of the diminished to side to cool. of a once cow a hydraulio e acquired a juice which a German superstition regards as milk, modify the malignity of its strength in a bucket of tenid water and ring up the breakfast. Mix the beverage in a cold cup, partake with moderation, and keep a wet rag around your head to guard against over-excitement.

TO CARVE TOWLS IN THE GERMAN PASHION.

Use a club, and avoid the joints.

CHAPTER L.

O. ar Blur m. tee preparagioses Perrin. I wonder why some things are ? For instance, art is allowed as much indecent li-cense to-day as in earlier times—but the pri-vileges of literature in this respect have been sharply entailed within the past eighty or minety years w Fielding and Smollet could portray the beastliness of their day in the beastliest language; we have plenty of foul subjects to deal with in our day, but we are not allowed to approach them very near, even with nice and guarded forms of speech. But not so with art. The brush may still deal freely with any subject, however revolting and indelicate. It makes a body coze sarcasm at every pore, to go about Rome and Florence and see what this last generation has been doing with the statues. These works, which had stood in innocent nakedness for ages, are all fig-leaved now. Yes, every one of them. Nobody noticed their nakedness before, perhaps; nobody can help noticing it now, the fig-leaf makes it so conspicuous. But the comical thing about it all, is, that the fig-leaf is confined to cold and pallid marble, which would be still cold and unsuggestive without this sham and unostentations symbol of modesty, whereas warmblooded paintings which do really need it have in no case been furnished with it.

At the door of the Ufizzi, in Florence, one is confronted by statues of a man and a woman, noseless, battered, black with accumulated grime-they hardly suggest human beings—yet these ridiculous creatures have been thoughtfully and conscientiously tigleaved by this festidious generation. enter, and proceed to that most-visited little gallery that exists in the world—the Tri-bune—and there, against the wall, without obstructing rag or leaf, you may look your fill upon the fonlest, the vilest, the obscenest picture the world possesses-Titian's Venus. It isn't that she is naked and stretched out on a bed-no, it is the attitude of one of her arms and hand. If I ventured to describe that attitude, there would be a fine howl-but there the Venus lies, for anybody to gloat over that wants to-and there she has a right to lie, for she is a work of art, and art has its privileges. I saw young girls stealing furtive glances at her; I saw young even gase long and absorbedly at her; I saw ages, infirm men hang upon her charms with a pathetic interest. How I should like to describe her—just to see what a holy indignation I could stir up in the world—just to hear the unreflecting average man deliver himself about my grossness and coarseness, and all that. The world says that no worded description of a moving spectacle is a hundredth part as moving as the same spectacle seem with one's own eyes—yet the world is willing to let its son and its daughts, and itself look at Titian's beast, but work taund a description of it in words. Which shows that the world is not as consistent as it might be.

There are pictures of nude women which suggest no impure thought—I am well aware of that. I am not railing at such. What I am trying to emphasize is the fact that Titian's Venus is very far from being one of that sort. Without any question it was painted for a ragnic and it was probably refused because it was a trifle too atrong. In truth it is too strong for any place but a public art gallery. Titian has two Venuses in the Tribune; persons who have seen them will easily remember which one I am referring to.

In every gallery in Europe there are hideous pictures of blood, carnage, oozing brains, putrefaction—pictures pooraying intolerable suffering—pictures alive with every conceivahorror, wrought out in dreadful detail—and similar pictures are being put on the canvas every day and publicly exhibited—without a growl from anybody—for they are iunocent, they are inoffensive, being works of art. But anypose a literary artist ventured to go into a pains-taking and elaborate description of one of these grisly things—the critics would skin him alive. Well, let it go, it cannot be helped; Art retains her privileges, Literature has lost here. Somebody else may cipher out the whys and the wherefores and the consistencies of it—I haven't got time.

Titian's Venus defiles and disgraces the Tribune, there is no softening that fact, but his 'Moses' glorifies it. The simple truthfulness of this noble work wins the heart and the applause of every visitor, be he learned or ignorant. After wearying oneself with the acres of stuffy, sappy, expressionless babies that populate the canvases of the lold Masters in Italy, it is refreshing to stand before this peerless child and feel that thrill which tells you you are at last in the presence of the real thing. This is a human child, this is genuine. You have seen him a thousand times—you have seen him just as he is here—and you confess, without reserve, that Tition was a Master. The doll-faces of other painted babes may mean one thing, they may mean another, but with the 'Moses' the case is different. The most famous of all the art critics has said, 'There is no room for doubt, here—plainly this child is in trouble.' trouble.

Committee of the second of the

I consider that the 'Moses' has no equal among the works of the Old Masters, except it be the divine Hair Trunk of Bessano. I feel aure that if all the other Cld Masters were lost and only these two preserved, the world would be the gainer by it.

My sole purpose in going to Florence was to see this immortal Moses, and by good fortune I was just in time, for they were dready preparing to remove it to a more private and better protected place, because a fashion of robbing the great galleries was prevailing in Europe at the time.

We took a turn to Rome and some other Italian cities—then to Munich, and thence to Paris—partly for exercise, but mainly because these things were in our projected programme, and it was only right that we should be faithful to it.

From Paris I branched out and walked through Holland and Belgium, procuring an occasional lift by rail or canal when tired, and I had a tolerably good time of it had and large.' I worked Spain and other regions to save time and shoe leather.

We crossed to England, and then made the homeward passage in the Cunarder, Gallia, a very fine ship. I was glad to get home—immeasurably glad; so glad, in fact that it did not seem possible that anything could ever get me out of the country again. I had not enjoyed a pleasure abroad which seemed to me to compare with the pleasure I felt in seeing New York harbour again. Europe has many advantages which we have not, but they do not compensate for a good many still more valuable ones which exist nowhere but in our own country. Then we are such a homeless lot when we are over there! So are Europeans themselves, for that matter. They live in dark and chilly vast tombs—costly enough, may be, but without conveniences. To be condemned to live as the average European family lives would make life a pretty heavy burden to the average American family.

On the whole I think that short visits to Enrope are better for us than long ones. The former preserve us from becoming Europeanized; they keep our pride of country intact, and at the same time they intensify our affection for our country and our people; whereas long visits have the effect of dulling cases. I think that one who mixes much with Americans long resident abroad must arrive at this copolusion. the everyon but ा भार्थका । विद्वास

STAN BER LE . VINE BAR . . . SE SE E. SVE

145 to less 1. 9 10 141 his

Carachan. APPENDIX A.—THE PORTIER

ra

A see fe will plate the 86 pi ta w bi

of the 8

Omar Khayam, the poet-prophet of Persia, writing more than eight hundred years ago, has said :

'In the four parts of the earth are many that are able to write learned books many that are able to lead armies, and many also that are able to govern kingdoms and empires; but few there be that can keep

A word about the European hotel portier. He is a most admirable invention, a most valuable convenience. He always wears a conspicuous uniform; he can always be found when he is wanted, for he sticks closely to his post at the front door; he is as polite as a duke; he speaks from four to ten lenguages; he is your surest help and refuge in time of trouble or perplexity. He is not the clerk, he is not the landerd; he ranks above the clerk, and represents the landlord, who is seldom seen. Instead of going to the clerk for information, as we do at home, you go to the portier. It is the pride of our average botel clerk to know nothing whatever; it is the pride of the portier to know everything. You ask the portier at what hours the trains leave-he tells you instantly; or you ask him who is the best physician in town; or what me the hack tariff; or how many children the Mayor has; or what days the galleties are open, and whether a permit is required, and where you are to get it, and what you must pay for it; or when the theatre open and close, what the plays are to be, and the price of seats; or what is the newest thing in hats; or how the bills of mortality average; or 'who struck Billy Patterson,' It does not matter what you ask him; in nine cases out of ten he knows, and in the tenth case he will find out for you before you can turn around three times. There is nothing he will not put his hand to. Suppose you tell him you wish to go from Hamburg to Pekin by the way of Jericho, and are ignorant of routes and prices—the next morning he will hand you a piece of paper with the whole thing worked out on it to the last detail. Before you have those feelings—at least in the majority of been long on European soil, you find yourself xee much gvon bill

JUN BER , 42% 1.62E 1 12 1 1

Eds & 1 TIER. t of Persia, years ago, are many

oks, many many also as and emcan keep tel portier.

m, a most ys Wears a always be he sticks door : he is rom four to t help and exity. He resents the Instead of a, as we do It is the to know ride of the ou ask the leave-he him who is what is the pildren the galleries are quired, and t you must e open and oe, and the ewest thing tality averterson. It im ; in nine

s, and in d out ofer m around will not put im you wish

by the way routes and l hand you hing worked ore you have find yourself

he gave the portier five marks, the head waiter four, the Boots three, and the chamthan half.

give the portier a mark.

The head waiter's fee is a shade less than the portier's; the Boots, who not only blacks your boots and brushes your clothes, but is usually the porter and handles your baggage, gets a somewhat smaller fee than the head still saying you are relying on Providence, but when you come to look closer you will see that you are relying on the portier. He discovers what is puzzling you, or what is troubling you, or what your need is, before you can get the half of it out, and he promptly says, Leave that to me, a Consequently you easily drift into the habit of leaving everything to him. There is a certain embarrasament about applying to the average American hotel clerk, a certain hesitancy, a sense of insecur ty against rebuff; but you. feel no embarraument in your interconrec with the portier; he receives your propo-citions with an enthusiasm which cheers, and

plunges into their accomplishment with an alsority which almost insbriates. The more requirements you can pile upon him, the better he likes it. Of course the result is that you cease from doing anything for yourself. He calls a back when you want one; puts you into it; tells the driver whether to take you; receives you like a long lost child when you return; sends you about your business, does all the quarrelling with the hackman himself, and pays him his money out of his own pocket. He sends for your ont of his own pocket. He sends for your theatre tickets, and pays for them; he sends for any possible article you can require, be it a doctor, an elephant, or a postage stamp :

and when you leave, at last, you will find a subordinate seated with the cab driver who will put you in your railway compartment, buy your tokets, have your baggage weigh-ed, bring you the printed tags, and tell you everything is in your bill and paid for. At home you get such elaborate, excellent and willing service as this only in the best hotels of our large cities; but in Europe you get it in the mere back country towns just as well.

tion? It is very simple: he gets fees, and no salary. His fee is pretty closely regu-lated, too. If you stay a week in the house, you give him five marks-a dollar and a quarter, or about eighteen cents a day. If you stay a month, you reduce this average somewhat. If you stay two or three months or longer, you out it down half, or even more

If you stay only one day, you

What is the secret of the portier's devowaiter; the chambermaid's fee ranks below that of the Boots. You fee only these four, and no one else. A German gentleman told me that when he remained a week in a hotel, bermaid two; and if he staid three months he divided minety marks among them, in about the above proportions. Ninety marks make $22 50.7 mm, and a partial field the same

None of these fees are ever paid until you leave the hotel, though it be a year—except one of these four servants should go away in the meantime; in that case he will be gree to come and bid you good bye and give you the opportunity to pay him what is fairly coming to him. It is considered very bad policy to fee a servant while you are still to remain longer in the hotel, because if you gave him too little he might neglect you afterward, and if you gave him too much he might neglect semebody else to attend to you. It is considered best to keep his ex pectations don a string until your stay is concluded. I do not know whether hotel servants in New York get any wages or not, but I do know that in some of the hotels there the feeling system in vogue is a heavy burden. The waiter expects a quarter at breakfast— and gets it. You have a different waiter at luncheon, and so he gets a quarter. Your waiter at dinner is another stranger-consequently he gets a quarter. The boy who carries your satchel to your room and lights your gas, fumbles around and hange around significantly, and you fee him to get rid of him. Now you may ring for ice water; and ten minutes later for a lemonade; and ten minutes afterwards, for a vigar; and byand by for a newspaper—and what is the result? Why, a new boy has appeared every time and fooled and fumbled around until you have paid him something. Suppose you holdly put your foot down, and say it is the hotel's business to pay its servants ?-- and suppose you stand your ground and stop feeing? You will have to ring your bell ten or fifteen times before you get a servant there; and when he goes off to fill your order you will grow old and infirm before you see him again. You may struggle nobly for twenty-four hours, may be, if you are an adamantine sort of person, but in the meantime you will have been so wretchedly served, and so insolently, that you will haul down your colours, and go to impoverishing yourself your fees.

It seems to me that it would be a happy idea to import the European feeing system into America. I believe it would result in getting even the bells of the Philadelphia hotels answered, and chee ful service ren-

The greatest American hotels keep a number of clerks and a cashier, and pay them salaries which mount up to a considerable total in the course of a year. The great continental hotels keep a cashier on a trifling continents notes seep a cameron a triting aslary, and a portier who pays the hotel a salary. By the latter system both the hotel and the public save money and are better served than by our system. One of our cosula told me that the portier of a great coesula told me that the portier of a great-Berlin hotel paid $5,000 a year for his pesition, and yet cleared $6,000 for himself. The position of portier in the chief hotels of Baratoga, Long Branch, New York, and similar centres of resort, would be one which the holder could afford to pay even more than $5,000 for, perhaps.

When we borrowed the feeing tashion from Europe a dozen years ago, the salary system ought to have been discontinued, of course. We might make this correction now, I should think. And we might add the portier, too. Since I tirst began to study the portier, I have had opportunities to ob-the portier, I have had opportunities to observe him in the chief cities of Germany, Switzerland, and Italy; and the more I have seen of him the more I have wished that he might be adopted in America, and become there, as he is in Europe, the stranger's guardian angel.

Yes, what was true eight hundred years ago, is just as true to-day: "Few there be that can keep hotel." Perhaps it is because the landlords and their subordinates have in too many cases taken up their trade without first learning it. In Europe the trade of hotel-keeper is taught. The apprentice begins at the bottom of the ladder and masters the several grades one after the other. Just as in our country printing-offices the apprentice first learns how to sweep out and bring water; then learns to 'roll;' then to sort 'pi;' then to set type; and finally rounds and completes his educa-tion with jub-work and press-work; so the landlord-apprentice serves as call-boy; then as under-waiter; then as a parlour-waiter; then as head-waiter, in which position he often has to make out all the bills ; then as clerk or cashier, then as portier. His trade is learned now, and by and by he will assume the style and diguity of landlord, and be found conducting a hotel of his own.

Now in Europe, the same as in America, when a man has kept a hotel so thoroughly well during a number of years as to give it a great reputation, he has his reward. can live prosperously on that reputation. He can let his hotel run down to the last degree of shabbiness and yet have it full of people all the time. For instance, there is the Hotel de Ville, in Milan. It swarms with mice and fleas, and if the rest of the world were destroyed it could furnish dirt enough to start another one with. The food would create an insurrection in a poor-house; and yet if you go outside to get your meels that hotel makes up its loss by over-charging you on all sorts of trifles—and without making any denisis or excuses about it, either. But the Hotel de Ville's old excelleat reputation still keeps its dreary rooms crowded with travellers who would be else-where if they had only had some wise friend to warn them.

real lead ing wor not ing has for ed mig the adv

rui

a h

tag Pec

wh

The and

eigi the

the

Ad

ed, tree wh lad by rat ren Th

one

pio tio

mo

fea

who pla He this op

Wa pa at

B HEIDELBERG CASTLE

Heidelberg Castle must have been very beautiful before the French battered and bruised and scorohed it two hundred years age. The stene is brown, with a pinkish tint, and does not seem to stain easily. The dainty and elaborate ornavientation upon its two chief fronts is as delicately carved as if it had been intended for the interior of a drawing room rather than for the outside of a house. Many fruit and flower-cluster, human heads and grim projecting lion's heads are still as perfect in every detail as if they were new. But the statues which are ranked between the windows have suffered. These are life-size statues of old-time emper-ors, electors, and similar grandess, clad in mail and bearing ponderous swords. Some have lost an arm, some a head, and one poor fellow is chopped off at the middle. There is a saying that if a stranger will pass over the draw-bridge and walk across the court front without saying anything, he can make a wish and it will be fulfilled. But they say that the truth of this thing has never had a chance to be proved, for the reason that be-fore any stranger can walk from the draw-bridge to the appointed place, the beauty of the palace front will extort an exclamation of delignt from him.

A ruin must be rightly situated, to be effective. This one could not have been better placed. It stands upon a commanding elevation, it is buried in green woods, there is no level ground about it, but on the contrary there are wooded terraces upon terraces, and one looks down through shining leaves into profound chasms and abyeses where twilight reigns and the sun cannot intrude. Nature knows how to garnish a ruin to get the best effect. One of these old towers is sliped down the middle, and one half has tumbled aside. It tumbled in such a way as to establish itself in a picturesque attitude. Then all it lacked was a fitting drapery, and Nature has furnished that; she has robbed the rugged mass in flowers and verdure, and made it a charm to the eye. The standing half exposes its arched and cavernous rooms to you, like open, toothless mouths; there, too, the vines and our meels ver-shargid without about it, old excelsary rooms id be elsewise friend been very tered and dred years a pinkish asily. The on upon its parved as if iterior of a outside of ver-cluster, ting lion's which are e suffered. time emperees, olad in rds. Some d one poor ile. There I pass over a the court e can make ut they say ever had a son that ben the drawe beauty of exclamation sated, to be have been commandeen woods, , but on the rraces upon rough shinand abysses n cannot inrnish a ruin of these old , and one half d in such a picturesque was a fitting ed that; she flowers and to the eye. arched and open, toothvines and flowers have done their work of grace. The rear portion of the tower has not been neglected, either, but is clothed with the clinging garment of polished ivy which hidee the wounds and stains of time. Even the jop is not left bare, but is crowned with a flourishing group of trees and shrubs. Misfortune has done for this old, tower what it has done for the human character sometimes—improved it.

LE

A gentleman remarked, one day, that it might have been fine to live in the castle in the days of its prime, but that we had one advantage which its vanished inhabitants lacked—the advantage of having a charming ruin to visit and muse over. But that was a hasty idea. Those people had the advantage of us. They had the fine castle to live in, and they could cross the Rhine valley and muse over the stately ruin of Trifels. People, in their day, five hundred years ago, could go and muse over majestic ruins which have vanished now to the last stone. There have always been ruins, no doubt; and there have always been pensive people to sigh over them, and asses to scratch upon them their names and the important date of their visit. Within a hundred years after Adam left Eden, the guide probably gave the usual general flourish with his hand and said: 'Place where the animals were named, ladies and gentlemen; place where the tree of the forbidden fruit stood; exact spot where Adam and Eve first met; and here, ladies and gentlemen, adorned and hallowed by the names and addresses of three generations of tourists, we have the crumbling remains of Cain's altar—fine old ruin!' Then, no doubt, he taxed them a shekel anices and let them go.

apiece and let them go.

An illumination of Heidelberg Castle is one of the sights of Europe. The Castle's picturesque shape; its commanding situation, midway up the steep and wooded mountain side; its vast size—these features combine to make an illumination a most effective spectacle. It is necessarily an expensive show, and consequently rather infrequent. Therefore, whenever one of these exhibitions is to take place, the news goes about in the papers, and Heidelberg is cure to be full of people on that night. I and my agent had one of these opportunities, and improved it.

About half past seven on the appointed evening we crossed the lower bridge, with some American students, in a pouring rate, and started up the road which borders the Neunheim side of the river. This roadway was densely packed with carriages and foot passengers; the former of all ages, and the atter of all ages and both sexes. This black and solid mass was struggling painfully on-ward, through the alop, the darkness, and the deluge. We waded along for three-quarters of a mile, and finally took up a position in an unsheltered beer garden directly opposite the Castle. We could not see the Castle,—or anything else, for that matter—but we could dimly discern the cut-lines of the mountain over the way, through the pervading blackness, and knew where-shouts the Castle was located. We steed on one of the hundred benches in the garden, under our umbrellas; the other ninety-nine were occupied by standing men and women, and they also had umbrellas. All the region round about, and up and down the river-road, was a dense wilderness of humanity hidden under an unbroken pavement of carriage tops and umbrellas. Thus we stood during two drenching hours. No rain fell on my head, but the converging whalebone points of a dozen neighbouring umbrellas poured little cooling streams of waterdown my neck, and sometimes into my ears, and thus kept me from getting hot and impatient. I had the rheumatism, too, and had heard that this was good for it. Afterward, however, I was led to believe that the water treatment is not good for rheumatism. There was even little girls in that dreadful place. A man held one in his arms, just in front of me, for as much as an hour, with umbrelladrippings soaking into her clothing all the time.

In the circumstances, two hours was a good while for us to thave to wait, but when the illumination did at last come, we felt repaid. It came unexpectedly, of course,things always do, that have been long looked and longed for. With a perfectly breathtaking suddenness several vast sheavesof various-coloured rockets were vomited skyward out of the black throats of the castle towers, accompanied by a thundering crash of sound, and instantly every detail of the prodigious ruin stood revealed against the mountain side and glowing with an almost intolerable splendour of fire and colour. For some little time the whole building was a blinding crimson mass, the towers continued to spout thick columns of rockets aloft, and overhead the sky was radiant with arrowy bolts which clove their way to the zenith, paused, curved gracefully downward, then burst into brilliant sprays of richly coloured sparks. The red fires died slowly down, within the Castle, and presently the shell grew nearly black outside; the angry glare that shone out through the broken arches and innumerable sashless windows, now, reproduced the aspect which the Castle must have borne in the old time when the French spoilers saw the monster bonfire which they had made there fading and amouldering toward ex-

The second secon

While we still gazed and enjoyed, the ruin was suddenly enveloped in rolling and tumbwas suddenly enveloped in Politic and Luming volumes of vaporous green fire; then in dazzling purple ones; then a mixture of many colours followed, and drowned the great fabric in its bleuded splendours. Meantime the nearest bridge had been illuminated, and from several rafts anchored in the river, meteor showers of rockets. Roman candles, bombs, serpents, and Catharine wheels were being discharged in wasteful profusion into the sky-a marvellous sight indeed to a person as little used to such spectacles as I was For a while the whole region about us seemed as bright as day, and yet the rain was falling in torrents all the time. The evening's entertainment presently closed, and we joined the innumerable caravan of half-drowned spectators, and waded home again.

The Castle grounds are very ample and very beautiful; and as they joined the hotel grounds, with no fences to climb, but only some nobly shaded stone stairway to descend, we spent a part of nearly every day in idling through their smooth walks and leafy groves. There was an attractive spot among the trees where there were a great many wooden tables and benches; and there one could sit in the shade and pretend to sip at his foamy beaker of beer while he inspected the crowd. I say pretend, because I only pretended to sip, without really sipping. That is the polite way; but when you are ready to go, you empty the beaker at a draught. There was a brass band, and it furnished excellent music every afternoon. Sometimes so many people came that every seat was occupied, every table filled. And never a rough in the assemblage—all nicely dressed fathers and mothers, young gentlemen and ladies and children; and pleuty of university students and glittering vincers; with here and there gray professor, or a peaceful old lady with her knitting; and always a sprinkling of gawky foreigners. Everybody has his glass of beer before him, or his cup of coffee, or his bottle of wine, or his hot cutlet and potatoes; young ladies chatted, or fanned themselves, or wrought at their crotchesting or embroidering; the students fed augar to their dogs, or discussed duels, or illustrated new fencing-tricks with their little canes; and everywhere was comfort and enjoyment, and everywhere peace and good-will to men. The trees were jubichildren. One could have a scat in that about eight cents, or a family ticket for the season for two dollars.

8

tl tì

m

OU:

Ch

m lif pr Lu

for

an 88 wi Th

00

te coti se st I tv la th

gto maih resti

For a change, when you wanted one, you could stroll to the castle, and burrow among its dungeons, or climb about its ruined towers, or visit its interior shows—the great Heidelberg Tun, for instance. Everybody has heard of the great Heidelberg Tun, and most people have seen it, no doubt. It is a wine cask as big as a cottage, and some tra-ditions say it holds eighteen hundred thousand bottles, and other traditions say it holds eighteen hundred million barrels. I thinkfit likely that one of these statements is a mistake, and the other one a lie. However, the mere matter of capacity is a thing of no sort of consequence, since the cask is empty, and indeed has always been empty, his says. An empty cask the size of a cathedral could excite but little emotion in me. I do not see any wisdom in building a monster cask to hoard up emptiness in, when you can get a better quality, outside, any day, free of expense. What could this cask have been built for? The more one studies over that, the more uncertain and unhappy he becomes. Some historians say that couples, some say thirty thousand couples, can dance at the head of this cask at the same time. Even this does not seem to me to account for the building of it. It does not even throw light on it. A profound and scholarly Englishman—a specialist—who had made the great Heidelberg Tun his sole study for fifteen years, told me he had at last satisfied himself that the ancients built it to make German oream in. that the average German cow yielded from one to two and a half teaspoonfuls of milk, when she was not worked in the plow or the hay wagon more than eighteen or nineteen hours a day. This milk was very sweet and good, and of a beautiful transparent bluish tint; but in order to get cream from it in the most economical way, a peculiar process was necessary. Now he believed that the habit of the ancients was to collect several milkings in a teacup, pour it into the great tun, fill up with water, and then skim off the cream from time to time as the needs of the German Empire demanded.

This began to look reasonable. It certainly began to account for the German cream which I had encountered and marvelled over in so many hotels and restaurants. But a thought struck me-

Why did not each ancient dairyman take his own teacup of milk and his own cask of water, and mix them, without making a government matter of it?

'Where could be get a cask large enough place and plenty of music, any afternoon, for to contain the right proportion of water ?"

et for the one, you te ruined the great

Everybody Tun, and some tradred thouone say it barrels. I statements ie. Howis a thing the cask is een empty, size of emotion in building & ptiness in, ty, outside, t could this more one tain and untorians say y' thousand this sask at not seem to of it. It A profound specialisterg Tun his i me he had he ancients He said in. vielded from ule of milk, plow or the or nineteen

y sweet and arent bluish rom it in the process was at the habit eeveral milkhe great tun, skim off the needs of the . It certainerman cream arvelled over ants. But a airyman take own cask of ut making s large enough n of water ?"

Very true. It was plain that the Euglishman had studied the matter from all sides. Still I thought I might catch him on one point; so I asked him why the modern empire did not make the nation's cream in the Heidelberg Tun, instead of leaving it to rot away unused. But he answered as one pre-

* A patient and diligent examination of the modern German cream has satisfied me that they do not use the Great Tun now, because they have got a bigger one hid away some-where. Either that is the case or they empty the spring milkings into the mountain tor-rents and then skim the Rhine all summer.'

There is a museum of antiquities in the castle, and among its most treasured relics are ancient manuscripts connected with German history. There are hundreds of these, and their dates stretch back through many centuries. One of them is a decree signed and sealed by the hand of a successor of Charlemagne, in the year 896. A signature made by a hand which vanished out of this life near a thousand years ago, is a more impressive thing than even a ruined castle. Luther's wedding ring was shown me; also a fork belonging to a time anterior to our era, and an early teotjack. And there was a plaster cast of the head of a man who was assassinated about sixty years ago. The atab wounds in the face were duplicated with unpleasant fidelity. One or two real hairs still remain n the eyebrows of the cast. That trifle seemed to almost to change the counterfeit into a corpse.

There are many aged portraits—some valuable, some worthless, some of great interest, some of none at all. I bought a couple—one a gorgeous duke of the olden time, and the other a comely blue-eyed damsel, a princess, may be. I bought them to start a portrait gallery of my ancestors with. I paid a dollar and a half for the duke and two and a half for the princess. Oue can lay in ancestors at even cheaper rates than these, in Europe, if he will mouse among old picture shops and look out for chances.

C. THE COLLEGE PRISON.

It seems that the student may break a good many of the public laws without having to answer to the public authorities. His case must come before the University for trial and punishment. If a policeman catches him in an unlawful act and proceeds to arrest him, the offender proclaims that he is a student, and perhaps shows his matricula-tion card, whereupon the officer asks for his address, then goes his way, and reports the matter at headquarters. If the offence is one over which the city has no jurisdiction, the authorities report the case officially to the University, and give themselves no further concern about it. The University court send for the student, listen to the evidence, and pronounce judgment. The punishment usually inflicted is imprisonment in the University prison. As I understand it, a student's case is often tried without his being present at all. Then something like this happens: A constable in the service of the University visits the lodgings of the said students, knocks, is invited to come in, does ot, and says politely—

'If you please, I am here to conduct you to prison.

'Ah,' says the student, 'I was not expecting it. What have I been doing?'

"Two weeks ago the public peace had the honour to be disturbed by you."
"It is true; I had forgotten it. Very well: I have been complained of, tried, and found guilty—is that it?'

'Exactly. You are sentenced to two days' solitary confinement in the College Prison, and I am sent to fetch you.

Officer. 'O, I can't go to-day!
Officer. 'If you please—why?'

Student. Because I've got an engagement.

Officer. 'To-morrow, then, perhaps?' Student. No, I am going to the opera, officer. 'Could you come Friday?' Student. (Reflectively.) 'Let me see Friday-Friday. I don't seem to have anything on hand Friday.'

Officer. 'Then, if you please, I will expect you on Friday.'

Student. 'All right, I'll come around Friday.'

Officer. 'Thank you. Good day, sir.' Student. 'Good day.'

So on Friday the student goes to the prison of his own accord, and is admitted.

It is questionable if the world's criminal history can show a custom more odd than this. Nobody knows, now, how it origi: nated. There have always been many noblemen among the students, and it is presumed that all students are gentlemen; in the old times it was usual to mar the convenience of such folk as little as possible; perhaps this indulgent custom owes its origin to this.

One day I was listening to some conversation upon this subject when an American student said that for some time he had been under sentence for a slight breach of the peace and had promised the constable that he would presently find an unoccupied day and betake himself to prison. I asked the young gentleman to do me the kindness to go to jail as soon as he conveniently could so that I might try to get in there and visit him, and see what college captivity was like. He said he would appoint the very first day he could spare.

His confinement was to endure twentyfour hours. He shortly chose his day, and sent me word. I started immediately. When I reached the University Place, I saw two gentlamen talking together, and as they had portfolios under their arms, I judged they were tutors or elderly studenta; so I asked them in English to show the college jail. I had learned to take it for granted that anybody in Germany who knows anything, knows English, to I had stopped afflicting people with my German. These gentlemen seemed a trifle amused—and a trifle confused, too-but one of them said he would walk around the corner with me and show me the place. He asked me why I wanted to get in there, and I said to see a friend—and for curiosity. He doubted if I would be admitted, but volunteered to put in a word or two for me with the custodian.

He rang the bell, a door opened, and we stepped into a paved way and then into a small living room, where we were received by a hearty and good natured German woman of fifty. She threw up her hands with a surprised 'Ach Gott, Herr Professor!' and exhibited a mighty deference for my new acquaintance. By the sparkle in her eye, I judged she was a good deal amused, too, The 'Herr Professor' talked to her in German, and I understood enough of it to know that he was bringing very plausible reasons to bear for admitting me. They were successful. So the Herr. Professor received my earnest thanks and de-parted. The old dame got her keys, took me up two or three flights of stairs, unlooked a door, and we stood in the presence of the oriminal. Then she went into a jolly and eager description of all that had occurred down stairs, and what the Herr Professor had said, and so forth and so on. Plainly she regarded it as quite a superior joke that I had waylaid a Professor and employed him in so odd a service. But I wouldn't have done it if I had known he was a Professor; therefore my conscience was not disturbed.

Now the dame left us to ourselves. The cell was not a roomy one; still it was a little larger than an ordinary prison cell. It had a window of good size, iron-grated; a small stove; two wooden chairs; two oaken tables very old and most elaborately carved with names, mottoes, faces, armorial bearings, etc. the work of several generations of imprisoned students, and a narrow wooden bedstead with a villainous old straw mattrass but no sheets, pillows, blankets or coverlets—for these the student must furnish at his own cost if he wants them. There was no carpet, of course. The ceiling was completely covered with names, dates, and monograms, done with candle amoke. The walls were thickly covered with pictures and portraits (in profile), some done with ink, some with soot, some with a pencil and some with red, blue, and green chalks; and wherever an inch of space had remained between the pictures, the captives had written plaintive verses, or names and dates. I do not think I was ever in a more elaborately frescoed apartment.

Against the wall hung a placard containing the prison laws. I made a note of one or two of these. For instance: The prisoner must pay, for the 'privilege' of entering, a sum equivalent to 20 cents of our money; for the privilege of leaving, when his term has expired, 20 cents; for every day spent in the prison, 12 cents; for fire and light, 12 cents a day. The jailer furnishes coffee, mornings, for a small sum; dinners and suppers may be ordered from outside if the prisoner chooses—and he is allowed to pay for them, too.

Here and there, on the walls, appeared the names of American students, and in one place the American arms and motto were displayed in coloured chalks.

With the help of my friend I translated many of the inscriptions. Some of them were cheerful, others the reverse. I will give the reader a few specimens;

'In my tenth semestre, (my best one,) I am cast here through the complaints of others. Let those who follow me take warning.

III Tage ohne Grund angeblich aus eugierde. Which is to say, he had a Neugierde. curiosity to know what prison-life was like; so he made a breach in some law and got three days for it. It is more than likely that he never had the same our iosity again.
(Translation.) 'E. Glinicke, four days for being too eager a spectator of a row.'

F. Graf Bismarck-27-29, II, '74.' Which means that Count Bismark, son of the great statesman, was a prisoner two days in 1874. (Translation.) 'R. Diergandt—for Love

—4 days.' Many people in this world have caught it heavier than that for the same indiscretion.

inis one is terse. I translate:
Four weeks for misinterpreted gallantry. I wish the sufferer had explained a little more serios The ference lar co three had . lain a In one He per left t stand captiv the n in sta MURD one p

The

It wa

curio the n and w wheth But ! thing Ood by the peace. tice o

In stude of chi the le The had s name faces

cover prison prote I. sorry oners ing w sell o his su get it up ur ter as tem with bathe urth:

ns of imwooden mattrass coverlets sh at his red with lone with a thickly i (in prowith soot, red, blue, n inch of pictures, verses, or nk I was ned apart-containing of one or sprisoner sprisoner metering, a remote y, his term day apent d light, 12 eas coffee, neers and side if the yed to pay peared the nd in one lotto were translated s of them se. I will est one,) I iplaints of me take he had a was like; w and got han likely saity again. four days a row. '74.' Which of the great tys in 1874. t—for Love world have the same in-l gallantry.'

more fully. A four weeks' term is a rather serious matter.

There were many uncomplimentary references, on the walls, to a certain unpopular college dignitary. One sufferer had got three days for not saluting him. Another had 'here two days slept and three rights lain awake,' on account of this same 'Dr. K.' In one place was a ploture of Dr. K. hanging on a gallows.

Here and there, lonesome prisoners had eased the heavy time by altering the records left by predecessors. Leaving the name standing, and the date and length of the captivity, they had erased the description of the misdemeanor, and written in its place, in staring capitals, 'FOR THEFT!' or 'FOR MURDER!' or some other gaudy crime. In one place, all by itself, stood this bloodeurdling word:

* RACHE ! **

There was no name signed, and no date. It was an inscription well calculated to pique curiosity. One would greatly like to know the nature of the wrong that had been done, and what sort of vengeance was wanted, and whether the prisoner ever achieved it or not. But there was no way of finding out these things.

Occasionally a name was followed simply by the remark, 'II days, for disturbing the peace,' and without comment upon the justice or injustice of the sentence.

In one place was a hilarious picture of a student of the green-cap corps with a bottle of champagne in each hand; and below was the legend: 'These make an evil fate endurable.'

There were two prison cells, and neither had space left on walls or ceiling for another name or portrait or picture. The inside surfaces of the two doors were completely covered with cartes de visite of former prisoners, ingeniously let into the wood and protected from dirt and injury by glass.

I very much wanted one of the sorry old tables which the prisoners had spent so many years in ornamenting with their pocket knives, but red tape was in the way. The custodian could not sell one without an order from a superior; and that superior would have to get it from his superior; and this one would have to get it from a higher one—and so on up and up until the faculty should sit on the matter and deliver final judgment. The system was right, and nobody could find fault with it; but it did not seem justifiable to bother so many people, so I proceeded no orther. It might have cost me more than

I could afford, anyway; for one of those prison tables, which was at that time in a private museum in Heidelberg, was afterwards sold at auction for two hundred and fifty dollars. It was not worth more than a dollar, or possibly a dollar and a half, before the captive atudents began their work on it. Persons who saw it at the auction said it was so curiously and wonderfully carved that it was worth the money that was paid for it.

Among the many who have tasted the college prison's dreary hospitality was a lively young fellow from one of the Southern States of America, whose first year's experience of German university life was rather peculiar. The day he arrived in Heidlberg he enrolled his name on the college books, and was so elated with the fact that his dearest hope had found fruition and he was actually a student of the old and renowned university, that he set to work that very night to cele-brate the event by a grand lark in company with some other students. In the course of his lark he managed to make a wide breach in [one of the university's most stringent laws. Sequel: before noon, next day, he was in the college prison—booked for three months. The twelve long weeks dragged alowly by, and the day of deliverance came at last. A great crowd of sympathizing fellow-students received him with a rousing demonstration as he came forth, and of course there was another grand lark—in the course of which he managed to make a wide breach in one of the city's most stringent laws. Sequel: before noon, next day, he was safe in the city lock-up—booked for three months. This second tedious captivity drew to an end in the course of time, and again a great orowd of sympathizing fellowstudents gave him a rousing reception as he came forth; but his delight in his freedom was so boundless that he could not proceed soberly and calmly, but must go hopping and skipping and jumping down the sleety street from sheer excess of joy. Sequel: he slipped and broke hie leg, and actually lay in the hospital during the next three months !

When he at last became a free man again, he said he believed he would hunt up a brisker seat of learning; the Heidelberg lectures might be good, but the hours of attending them were too rare, the educational process too slow; he said he had come to Europe with the idea that the acquirement of an education was only a matter of time, but if he had averaged the Heidelberg system or rectly, it was rather a matter of eteraity.

D.-TAE AWFUL GERMAN LANGUAGE.

A little learning makes the whole world kin.-Proverbs xxxii, 7.

I went often to look at the collection of curiosities in Heidelberg Castle, and one day I surprised the keeper of it with my German. I spoke entirely in that language. He was greatly interested; and after I had talked awhile he said my German was very rare, possibly a "unique;" and wanted to add it to his museum.

If he had known what it had cost me to acquire my art, he would also have known that it would break any collector to buy it. Harris and I had been hard at work on our German during several weeks at that time, and although we had made good progress, it had been accomplished under great difficulty and aunoyance, for three of our teachers had died in the meantime. A person who has not studied German can form no ides of what a perplexing language it is.

Surely there is not another language that is so slip-shod and systemless, and so slippery and clusive to the grasp. One is washed about in it, hither and thither, in the most helpless way; and when at last he thinks he has captured a rule which offers firm ground to take a rest on amid the general rage and turmoil of the ten parts of speech, he turns over the page and reeds, 'Let the pupil make careful note of the following excep-tions.' He runs his eye down and finds that there are more exceptions to the rule than instances of it. So overboard he goes again, to hunt for another Ararat and find another quicksand. Such has been, and continues to be, my experience. Every time I think I have got one of these four confusing 'cases' where I am master of it, a seemingly insignificant preposition intrudes itself into my sentence, clothed with an awful and unsuspected power, and crumbles the ground from under me. For instance, my book inquires after a certain bird-( it is always inquiring after things which are or no sort of consequence to anybody): "Where is the bird?' Now the answer to this question—according to the book—is that the bird is waiting in the blacksmith shop on account of the rain. Of course no bird would do that, but then you must stick to the book. Very well, I began to cipher out the German for that enswer. I begin at the wrong end, necessarily, for that is the German idea. I say to myself, ' Regen, ( rain,) is masculine or maybe it is feminine or possibly neuter—it is too much trouble to look, now. Therefore, it is either der (the) Regen, or die (the) Regen, or das (the)

Regen, according to which gender it may turn out to be when I look. In the interest of science, I will cipher it out on the hypothesis that it is masculine. Very well—then the rain is der Regen, if it is simply in the quiescent state of being mentioned, without enlargement or discussion—Nominative case; but if this rain is lying around, it is kind of a general way on the ground, it is then definitely located, it is doing something—that is, resting, (which is one of the German grammar's ideas of doing something,) and this throws the rain into the Dative case, and makes it dem Regen. However, this rain is not resting, but is doing something actively—it is falling—to interfere with the bird, likely—and this indicates movement, which has the effect of sliding it into the Accusative case and changing dem Regen into den Regen. Having completed the grammatical horoscope of this matter, I answer up confidently and state in German that the bird is staying in the blacksmith shop 'wegen (an account of) den Regen. Then the teacher lets me softly down with the remark that whenever the word 'wegen' drops into a sentence, it always throws that subject into the Genitive case, regardless of consequences—and that therefore this bird staid in the blacksmith shop 'wegen des Regens.'

Regens.'
N. B. I was informed, later, by a higher authority, that there was an 'exception' which permits one to say 'wegen des Regen' in certain peculiar and complex circumstance, but that this exception is not extended to anything but rain.

There are ten parts of speech, and they are all troublesome. An average sentence, in a German newspaper, is a sublime and impressive curiosity; it occupies a quarter of a column; it contains all the ten parts of speech—not in regular order, but mixed; it is built mainly of compound words constructed by the writer on the spot, and not to be found in any dictionary—six or seven words compacted into one, without joint or seam—that is, without hyphens; it treats of four-teen or fifteen different subjects, each enclosed in a parenthesis of its own, with here and there extra parentheses which re-enclose three or four of the minor parentheses, making pens within pens; finally all the parenthese and re-parentheses tare massed temperatures are tree or four of the minor parentheses, making pens within pens; finally all the parenthese and re-parentheses tare massed temperatures and the other in the middle of the last line of it—after which comes the verb, and you find out for the first time what the man has been talking about; and after the verb—merely by way of ornament, as far as I can make out—the writer shove ben and : that the fl sary, enou the le as to that : man rema Ye tirely diste as to when

No and opered literathesis tance there and the result of the results of the resul strai: gove:

carrie

you a

The by Mean of the structure of the stru litera every with tised with and fog peop nece woul that confi when chovels in 'haben sind gewesen gehabt hader it may ben geworden sein,' or words to that effect, he interest and the monument is finished. I suppose at on the that this closing hurrah is in the nature of Very well the flourish to a man's signature-not necest is simply mentioned. sary, but pretty. German books are easy enough to read when you hold them before -Nominathe looking-glass or stand on your head-so around, in as to reverse the construction—but I think round, it is that to learn to read and understand a Gersomething man newspaper is a thing which must always f the Gerremain an impossibility to a foreigner.

Yet even the German books are not entirely free from attacks of the parenthesis something,) the Dative However, doing some. interfere is indicates distemper-though they are usually so mild as to cover only a few lines, and therefore when you at last get down to the verb it carries some meaning to your mind, because you are able to remember a good deal of what has gone before.

Now here is a sentence from a popular and excellent German novel-with a slight parenthesis in it. I will make a perfectly literal translation, and throw in the parenthesis-markefand some hyphens for the assistance of the reader—though in the original there are no parenthesis-marks or hyphens, and the reader is left to flounder through to the remote verb the best way he can :

But when he, upon the street, the (insatin - and - silk - covered - now - very unconstrainedly - after-the-newest-fashiou-dressed) government counseller's wife met, etc.,

That is from 'The Old Manselle's Secret,' by Mrs. Marlitt. And that sentence is constructed upon the most approved German model. You observe how far the verb is from the reader's base of operations; well, in a German newspaper they put their verb away over on the next page; and I have heard that sometimes after stringing along on exciting preliminaries and parentheses for a column or two, they got in a hurry and have to go to press without getting to the verb at all. Of course, then, the reader is left in a very exhausted and ignorant state.

We have the parenthesis disease in our literature, too; and one may see cases of it every day in our books and newspapers: but with us it is the mark and sign of an unpractised writer or a cloudy intellect, whereas with the Germans it is doubtless the mark and sign of a practised pen and of the pre-sence of that sort of luminous intellectual fog which stands for clearness among these people. For surely it is not clearness-it necessarily can't be clearness. Even a jury would have penetration enough to discover that. A writer's ideas must be a good deal confused, a good deal out of line and sequence, when he starts to say that a man met a counsellor's wife in the street, and then right in the midst of this so simple undertaking halts these approaching people and makes them stand still until he jots down an inventory of the woman's dress. That is manifestly aburd. It reminds a person of those dentists whosecure your instant and breathless interest in a tooth by taking grip on it with the forceps, and then stand there and drawl through a tedious aneodote before they give the dreaded jerk. Parenthreis in literature and dentistry are in bad taste.

The Germans have another kind of parenthesis, which they make by splitting a verb in two and putting half of it at the beginning of an exciting chapter and the other half at the end of it. Can any one conceive of any-thing more confusing than that? These things are called 'separable verbs.' The German grammar is blistered all over with separable verbs; and the wider the two portions of one of them are spread apart, the better the author of the crime is pleased with his performance. A favorite one is reviste ab-which means, departed. Here is an example which I culled from a novel and reduced to English:

The trunks being now ready, he DE after kissing his mother and sisters, and once more pressing to his boson his adored Gretchen, who, dressed is simple white muslin, with a single tube-rose in the ample folds of her rich brown hair, had tottered feebly down the stairs, still pale from the terror and excitement of the past evening, but longing to lay her poor aching head yet once again on the breast of him whom she loved more dearly than life itself, PARTED.

However, it is not well to dwell too much on the separable verbs. One is sure to lose his temper early; and if he sticks to the subject, and will not be warned, it will at last either soften his brain or petrify it. Personal pronouns and adjectives are a fruitful nuisance in this language, and should have been left out. For instance, the same sound, sie, means you, and it means ahe, and it means her, and it means it, and it means them. Think of the ragged poverty of a raggage which has to make one word do the work of six—and a poor little weak thing of only three letters at that. But mainly, think of the exasperation of never knowing which of these meanings the speaker is trying to convey. This explains why, whenever a person says sie to me, I generally try to kill him, if

Now observe the adjective. Here was a case where simplicity would have been an advantage; therefore, for no other reason, seven words nt or seamreats of fourn, each enh re-enclose athesis, makil the parenparenthezes, first line of

of sliding it

anging dem

completed

s matter, I

in German blacksmith

den Regen.

down with

ord 'wegen'

throws that

egardless of re this bird

wegen des

by a higher

exception n des Regen'

ircumstancs.

extended to

ch, and they

sentence, in quarter of a en parts of

ut mixed; it

rds construc-

nd not to be

other in the after which t for the first Iking about; way of ornat-the writer the inventor of this language complicated it all he could. When we wish to speak of our "good friend or friends," in our enlightened tongue, we stick to the one form and have no trouble or hard feeling about it; but with the German tongue it is different. When a German gets his hand on an adjective, he declines it, and keeps on declining it until the common sense is all declined out of it. It is as bad as Latin. He says, for instance:

SINGULAR.

Nominative-Mein guter Freund, my good friend.

Genitive-Meines guten Freundes, of my good friend.

Dative-Meinem guten Freund, to my good friend.

Accusative Meinen guten Freund, my good friend,

PLURAL.

N.—Meine guten Freunde, my good friends.

G.—Meiner guten Freunde, of my good friends.

D.—Meinen guten Freunden, to my good friends.

A.—Meine guten Freunde, my good friends.

Now! let the candidate for the asylum try to memorize these variations, and see how soon he will be elected. One might better go without friends in Germany than take all this trouble about them. I have shown what a bother it is to decline a good (male) friend; well, this is only a third of the work, for there is a variety of new distortions of the adjective to be learned when the object is feminine, and still another when the object is neuter. Now there are more adjectives in this language than there are black cate in Switzerband, and they must all be as elaborately declined as the examples above suggest-Difficult :-- troublesome ? -- these words cannot describe it. I heard a Californian student in Heidelberg, say, in one of his calmest moods, that he would rather decline two drinks than one German adjective.

The inventor of the language seems to have taken pleasure in complicating it in every way be could think of. For instance, if one is casually referring to a house, Haus, or a horse, Pferd, or a dog, Hund, he spells these words as I have indicated; but if he is referring to them in the Dative case, he sticks on a foolish and unnecessary (e) and spells them Hause, Pferde, Hunde. So as an added (e) often signifies the plural, as the (s) does with us, the new student is likely to go on for a month making twins out of a Dative dog before he discovers his mistake; and on the other hand, many a new student who could ill afford loss, has bought and paid for two dogs and only got one of them, because he ignorantly bought that dog in the Dative singular when he really supposed he was talking plural—which left the law on the seller's side, of course, by the strict rules of grammar, and therefore a suit for recovery could not lie.

The

what will

is a mati

doub

most tryi

that

mess milis

min

off t

OVET

W.CHOO

unto neut

fish :

neitl

he i

enou

A G

Engl

and

erini

still

he p

nine,

laud

wom

desc

a dif

pers

and

alws

oven

with

and

ance

gins

all t

Out

Ger

thin

way

TAL

I

he ;

80F

the

Fis!

and

W Bex

In

In German, all the nouns begin with a capital letter. Now that is a good idea; and a good idea, in this language, is necessarily conspicuous from its lonesomeness. I consider this capitalizing of nouns a good idea, because by reason of it you are almost always able to tell a noun the minute you see it. You fall into error occasionally, because you mistake the name of a person for the name-of a thing, and weste a good deal of time trying to dig a meaning out of it. names almost always do meso something, and this helps to deceive the student. I translated a passage one day, which said that ' the infuriated tigress broke icom and utterly ate up the unfortunate fir-forest, (Tannenwald). When I was girding up my loins to doubt this, I found out that Tannenwald, in this instance, was a man's name.

Every noun has a gender, and there is no sense or system in the distribution; so the gender must be learned separately and by heart. There is no other way. To do this one has to have a memory like a memorandam book. In German, a young lady has no sex, while a turnip has. Think what overwrought reverence that shows for the turnip, and what callous disrespect for the girl. See how it looks in print—I translate this from a conversation in one of the best of the German Sunday-school books:

Gretchen. Witheim, where is the turnin?

Wilhelm. She has gone to the kitchen. 'Gretchen. Where is the socomplished and beautiful English maiden?

"Wilhelm. It has gone to the opera."
To continue with the German genders: a tree is male, its buds are female, its leaves are neuter; horses are sexless, dogs are neuter; horses are sexless, dogs are male, cats are female—tom-cats included, of course; a person's mouth, neck, bosom, elbows, fingers, nails, feet, and body are of the male sex, and his head is make or neuter, according to the word selected to signify it, and not according to the selected to signify it, and not according to the selected to signify it, and not according to the selected to signify it, and not according to the selected to signify it, and not according to the selected to signify it, and not according to the selected to signify it, and not according to the selected to signify it, and to each selected to signify it.

of a Dative ke; and on tudent who and paid for em, because the Dative he was talkthe seller's les of gramovery could egin with a necessari'v ess. I coma good idea, most always u see it. You use you misthe name-of f time try-Garman mething, and t. I trans. id that ' the d usterly ate annenwald). as to doubt vald, in this

d there is no tion; so the ately and by To do this a memorang lady has no what overr the turnip, the girl See ste this from t of the Gere is the tur-

the kitchen. coomplished

e opera." genders : a le, its leaves es, dogs are included, o' k, bosom, el-dy are of the r neuter, aco signify it, the individany all the s or sexless lder, breast, female sex; legs, knees, heart and conscience, haven't any sex at all. The inventor of the language probably got what he knew about a conscience from here-

Now, by the above dissection, the reader will see that in German a man may think he is a man, but when he comes to look into the matter closely, he is bound to have his doubte; he finds that in sober truth he is a most rividuous mixture; and if he ends by trying to comfort himself with the chought that he can at least depend on a third of this mess as being manly and mascaline, the humiliating second thought will quickly remind him that in this respect he is no better of than any woman or cow in the land.

In the German it is true that by some oversight of the inventor of the language, a woman is female, but a wife is not-which is unfortunate. A wife here has no sex, she is nenter; so, according to the grammar, a fish is he, his scales are she, but a fishwife is neither. To describe a wife as sexless may be called under-description; that is bad enough, but over description is surely worse. A German speaks of an Englishman as the Englander: to change the sex he adds inn, and that stands for Englishwomen-England. erinn. That seems descriptive enough, but still it is not exact enough for a German; so he precedes the word with that article which indicates that the creature to follow is feminine, and writes it down thus:—'die Engleaderinn,' which means 'the she-Englishwoman.' I consider that that person is overdescribed.

Well, after the student has learned the sex of a great number of nouns, he is still in a difficulty, because he finds it impossible to persuade his tongue to refer to things as 'he' and 'she,' and 'him' and 'her,' which he has always been accustomed to as 'it.' When he even frames a German sentence in his mind. with the hims and hers in the right places, and then works up his courage to the utterance-point, it is no use—the moment he begins to speak his tongue flies the track and all those laboured males and females come out as 'its.' And even when he is reading German to himself he always calls those things 'it,' whereas he ought to read in this

TALE OF THE UISHWIFE AND ITS SAD FATE.

It is a by . Day. Hear the Rain, how he y sure and the Hail, how he rattles; and see the brow, how he drifts along, and oh the Mad, how deep he is! Ah the poor Fish it is stuck fast in the Mire: it has dropped its Backet of Fishes; and its hande have been cut by the Scales as it seized som . of the falling Creatures; and one Scale has even got into its Eye, and it cannot get her out. It opens its Month to cry for Help; but if any Sound comes out of him, alas he is drowned by the raging of the Storm. And now a Tomcat has got one of the Fishes and she will surely escape with him. No, she bites off a Fin, she holds her in her month—will she swallow her? No, the Fishwive's brave Mother-Dog deserts his Puppies and rescues the Fin—which he eats himself, as his reward. O, horror, the lightning has struck the fishbasket; he sets him on fire; see the flame, how she licks the doomed utensil with her red and angry tongue; now she attacks the helpless Fishwife's foot—she burns him up, all but the big Toe and even she is partly consumed; and still she apreads, still she waves her fiery Tongues; she attacks the Fishwife's Leg and destroys it; she attacks its Hand and destroys her; she attacks its poor worn Garment and destroys her also; she attacks its Body and consumes him; she wreathes herself about its Heart and it is consumed: next about its Breast, and in a Moment she is a Cinder; now she reaches its Neck—he goes; now its Chin—it goes; now its Nose—she goes. In another Moment, except Help come, the Fishwife will be no more. Time presses—is there none to succour and save ? Yes! Joy, joy, with flying Feet the she-Englishwoman comes! But alas, the generous she-Female is too late; where now is the fated Fishwife? It has ceased from its Sufferings, it has gone to a better Land; all that is left of it for its loved ones to lament over, is this poor smouldering Ash-heap. Ah, woful, woful Ash-heap! Let us take him up tenderly, reverently, upon the lowly Shovel, and bear him to his long Rest, with the Prayer that when he rises again it will Le in a Realm where he will have one good square responsible Sex, and have it all to himself, instead of having a mangy lot of assorted Sexes scattered all over him in Spots.

"I capital's the founs, in the German (and Ancient Electrical) fashion.

There, now, the reader can see for him self that this pronoun-business is a very awkwan thing for the unaccustomed tongue. I emplose that in all languages the similat the of look and stand between words which have no similarity in meaning are a fruitful source of perplexity to the foreigner.

It is so in our tongue, and it is notedly the case in the German. Now there is that troublesome word vermailt : to me it has so close a resemblance,—either real or faucied to three or four other words, that I never know whether it means despised, painted, suspected, or married; until I look in the dictionary, and then I find it means the latter. There are lots of such words, and they are a great torment. To increase the difficulty there are words which seem to resemble each other, and yet do not; but they make just as much trouble as if they did. For instance, there is the word vermiethen, (to let, to lease, to hire;) and the word verheirathen, (another way of say-ing to marry.) I heard of an Englishman who knocked at a man's door in Heidelberg and proposed, in the best German he could com-mand, to 'verheirathen' that house. Then there are some words which mean one thing when you emphasize the first syllable, but mean something very different if you throw the emphasis on the last syllable. For instance, there is a word which means a runaway, or the act of glancing through a book, according to the placing of the emphasis; and another word which signifies to associate with a man, or to avoid him, according to where you put the emphasis—and you can generally depend on putting it in the wrong place and getting into trouble.

There are some exceedingly useful words in this language. Schlag, for example; and Zug. There are three-quarters of a column of Schlags in the dictionary, and a column and a half of Zugs. The word Schlag means Blow, Stroke, Dash, Hit, Shook, Clap, Slap, Time, Baz, Coin, Stamp, Kind, Sort, Manner, Way, Apoplexy, Wood-Cutting, Enclosure, Field, Forest-Clearing. This is its simple and exact meaning—that is to say, its restricted, its fettered meaning; but there are ways by which you can set it free, so that it can soar away, as on the wings of the morning, and never be at rest. You can hang any word you please to its tail, and make it mean anything you want to. You can begin with Schlag-ades, which means artery, and you can hang on the whole dictionary, word by word, clear through the alphabet to Schlag-wassez, which means bilge-water—and including Schlag-mutter, which means mother-in-law.

Just the same with Zug. Strictly speaking, Zug means Pull, Tug, Draught, Procession, March, Progress, Flight, Direction, Expedition, Train, Caravan, Passage, Stroke, Touch, Line, Flourish, Trait of Character, Feature, Lineament, Chess-move, Organstop, Team, Whift, Bias, Drawer, Propensity, Inhalation, Disposition; but that thing which it does not mean—when all its legitimate pendants have been hung on, has not been discovered yet.

One cannot overestimate the usefulness of Schlag and Zug. Armed just with these two, and the word, also, what cannot the foreigner on German soil accomplish? The German word, also, is the equivalent of the English phrase. "You know," and a wanted mean anything at all—in talk, though it sometimes does in print. Every time a German opens his month an also, falls out, and every time he shuts it he bites one in two that was trained out on the

that was trying to get out, Now, the foreigner, equipped with these three noble words, is master of the situation. Let him talk right along, fearlessly; let him pour his indifferent German forth, and when he looks for a word, let him heave a Schlag into a vacuum; all the chances are, that it fits it like a plug; but if it doesn't, let him promptly heave a Zug after it; the two together can hardly fail to bung the hole; but if, by a miracle, they should fail, let him simply say Also ! and they will give him another chance to think of the needful word. In Germany when you load your conversational gun it is always best to throw in a Schlag or two and a Zug or two; because it doesn't make any difference how much the rest of the charge may scatter, you are bound to bag something with them. Then you blandly say 'also,' and lead up again. Nothing gives such an air of grace and elegance and unconstraint to a German or an English conversation as to scatter it full of 'also's' or " You-knows."

In my note-book I find this entry:

July 1.—In the hospital, yesterday, a word of thirteen syllables was successfully removed from a patient—a North-German from near Hamburg; but as most unfortunately the surgeons had opened him in the wrong place, under the impression that he contained a panorama, he died. The sad event has cast a gloom over the whole community.

That paragraph furnishes a text for a few remarks about one of the most curious and notable features of my subject—the length of German words. Some German words are so long that they have a perspective. Observe these examples: Freundschaftsbezeigungen.

Dilletantenaufdringlichkeiten.
Stadtverordnetenversammlungen.
These things are not words, they are alphabetical processions. And they are alphabetical processions. And they are not rare; one can open a German newspaper any time and see them marching majestically acress the page, and if he has any imagination he can see the banners and hear the music, too. They impart a martial drill to the weakert subject. I take a great interest in these curiosities. Whenever I come across a good one, I stuff it and put it in my museum. In this way I have made quite a valuable collection. When I get duplicates, I exchange with other collectors, and thus increase the variety of my

Atook. Atoly of a b GEN MLUN ALL UN Of mounting and the state of the s wordio ed

the had

lish ? # The valent of the and awa not , thonga it time a Gor-alls out, and one in two with these he situation. arlessly; let a forth, and him heave a chances are, f it doesn't, fter it ; the bung the ey will give the needful ad your conto throw in w much the Then you again. Nond elegance an English of 'also's' try:

y, a word of lly removed from near tely the sur-place, un-ned a pano-cast a gloom ct for a few urious and the length an words erspective.

and they n a Gersee them age, and if the baney impart When. uff it and When I ther col-ty of my stock. Here are some specimens which I lately bought at an auction sale of the effects of a bankrupt bric-a-brac hunter :

GENERALSTAATSVERORONETEN MLUNGEN.

ALTERTHUMSWISSEEASCHAFTEN. KINDERBEWAHRUNGLANSTALTEN. Unabhaengigkeitserklaerungen. WIEDERHERSTELLUNGSBESTREBUNDEN.

Wagyenstillstandsunterhandlungen. Of course when one of these great mountain ranges goes stretching across the printed page, it adoras and ennobles the literary landscape—but at the same time it is a great distress to the new student, for it blocks up his way; he cannot orawl under it, or climb over it or tunnel through it. So he resorts to the dictionary for help; but there is no help there. The dictionary must draw the line somewhere—so it leaves this sort of words out. And it is right, because these long things are hardly legitimate words, but are rather combinations of words. and the inventor of them ought to have been killed. They are compound words, with the hyphens left out. The various words used in building them are in the dictionary, but in a very scatter-ed condition; so you can hunt the materials out, one by one, and get at the meaning at last, but it is a tedious and harassing business. I have tried the process upon some of the above examples, 'Freundschaftsbezeigungen' seems to be 'Friendship demonstrations,' which is only a foolish and clumsy way of saying 'demonstrations of friendship.' 'Unabhaengigkeitserklaerungen' seems to be 'Independence declarations,' which is no improvement to be 'Delevations of Independence' as far upon 'Declarations of Independence,' as far I can sec. "Generalstaatsverordnetenversammlungen ' seems to be ' Generalstates. representativesmeetings,' as nearly as I can get at it—a mere rhythmical, gushy euphoism for 'meetings of the legislature,' I judge. We used to have a good deal of this sort of crime in our literature, but it has gone out, now. We used to speak of a thing as a never-to-be-forgotten' circumstance, instead of cramping it into the simple and sufficient word 'memorable' and then going calmly about our business as if nothing had happened. In those days we were not content to embalm the thing and bury it decently, we wanted to build a monument over it.

But in our newspapers the compoundingdisease lingers a little to the present day, but with the hyphens left out, in the German fashion. This is the shape it takes: man fashion. This is the shape it takes: instead of asying 'Mr. Simons, o'irk of the county and district courts, was in town yesterday,' the new form puts it thus: 'Clerk with...

of the County and District Court Simmons was in town yesterday.' This saves neither time nor ink, and has an awkward sound be-sides. One often sees a remark like this in sides. One often sees a remark like this in our papers: 'Mrs. Assistant District Attorney Johnson returned to her city residence yesterday for the season.' This is a case really unjustifiable compounding; because it not only saves no time or trouble, but confers a title on Mrs. Johnson which she has no right to. Put these little instances are trifles indeed, contrasted with the ponderous and dismal German system of piling jumbled compounds together. I wish to submit the following local item, from a Mannheim journal, by was of illustration:

In the daybeforeyesterdayahortlyafter-eleveno'olook Night, the inthistownstanding-tavern called "The Wagoner" was downburnt. When the fire to the onthed wn-burninghouseresting Stork's Nest resched, flew the parent Storks away. But when the bytheraging, firesurrounded Nest itself caught Fire, straightway plunged the quickreturning Mother Stork in the fiames and died her wings over her wonne one and died, her wings over her young ones outspread.'

Even the cumbersome German construction is not able to take the pathos out of that picture—indeed it somehow seems to strengthen it. This item is dated away back yonder months ago. I could have used it sooner, but I was waiting to hear from the Father Stork. I am still waiting.

'Also I' | If I have not shown that the 'Also l' | If I have not shown that the German is a difficult language, I have at least intended to do it. I have heard of an American student who was asked how he was getting along with his German, and who answered promptly: 'I am not getting along at all. I have worked at it have for the worked at it have for along at all. I have worked at it have for three level months, and all I have got to show for it is one solitary German phrase—"Zwei glas," (two glasses of beer). He paused a moment, reflectively, then added with feeling, 'But I've got that solid!"

And if I have not also shown that German is a haraceing and infusional control of the solitary in the control of the solitary is a haraceing and infusional control of the solitary is a haraceing and infusional control of the solitary is a haraceing and infusional control of the solitary is a haraceing and infusional control of the solitary is a solitary in the solitary in the solitary is a haraceing and infusional control of the solitary is a solitary in the solitary in the solitary in the solitary is a solitary in the solitary in the solitary in the solitary is a solitary in the solitary that German is a harsening and infuri-and study, my execution has been at fault, and not my intent. I heard lately of a worn and sorely tried American student who used to fly to a certain German word for relief when he could bear up under aggra-vations no longer—the whole word in the language whose sound was sweet and precious to his ear and healing to his lacerated apirit. This was the word Damit. It was only the bound that helped him, not the meaning; and so, at last, when be learned that the emphasis was now on the first syllable, his only stay and support was gone,

* It merely means, in its general sense, " here-

and he faded away and died. I think that a description of any loud, stirring, tumultuous spisode must be tamer German than in English. Our descriptive words of this character have such a deep, strong, resonant sound, while their German equivalents do seem so thin and mild and energyless. Boom, burst, orash, roar, storm, bellow, blow, thunder, explosion; howl, cry, sheut, yell, groan; battle, hell. These are magnificent words; they have a force and magnitude of sound befitting the things which they describe. But their German exuivalents would be ever so nice to sing the children to aleep with, or else my awe inspiring ears were made for display, and not for superior usefulness in analysing sounds. Would any man want to die in a battle which was called by so tame a term as a Sohlacht? Or would not a consumptive feel too much bundled up, who was about to go out, in a shirt collar and a seal ring, into a storm which the bird-sing word Gewitter was employed to de-scribe? And observe the strongest of the soveral German equivalents for explosion-Ausbauch. Our word toothbrush is more powerful than that. It seems to me that the Germa sould do worse than import it into their language to describe | ar icularly tremendous explosions with. The German word for hell-holte -sounds more like helly than anything else; therefore, how necessarily olipper, frivolous and unimpressive it is. If a man were told in German to go there, could he rise to the dignity of feeling insulted?

Having now pointed out, in detail, the several vices of this language, I now come to the brief and pleasant task of pointing out its virtues. The capitalization of the nouns, I have already mentioned. But far before this virtue stands another—that of spelling a word according to the sound of it. After one short lesson in the alphabet, the student can tell how any German word is pronounced, without having to ask; whereas in our language if a student should inquire of us 'What does 15. O, W. spell?' we should be obliged to reply, 'Nobody can tell what it spells, when you set it off by itself-you can only tell by referring to the context and fluding out what signifies—whether it is a thing to shoot arrows with, or a nod of one's head, or the forward end of a boat.'

There are some German words which are singularly and powerfully effective. For instance, those which describe lowly, peaceful and affectionate home life; those which deal with love, in any and all forms, from with ever so good a Verb, but I notice that mere kindly feeling and honest good will toward the passing atranger, clear up to courtship; those which deal with out-door Nature, in its softest and loveliest aspects— with meadows and forests, and birds and flowers, the fragrance and sunshine of summer, and the moonlight of peaceful winter nights; in a word, those which does with any and all forms of rest, repose, and leads; those also which deal with the occutures and marvels of fairyland; and leastly and chiefly in those words which express pathos, is the language surpassingly rich and effective. There are German songs which can make a stranger to the language cry. That shows that the sound of the words is correct—it intercrets the language cry. That shows that the sound of the words is correct—it interprets the meanings with truth and with exactness; and so the ear is informed, and through the ear the heart.

you

erip

pars the T

the also ago

F and the noth

long

inte

do i

the

COM

oth

to 1 8

wh tho

hat

ora

CAT

the

par

100 els In

minal straight S.

The Germans do not seem to be afraid to repeat a word when it is the right one. They repeat it several times, if they choose. That is wise. But in English when we have used a word a couple of times in a paragraph, we imagine we are growing tautological, and so we are weak enough to exchange it for some other word which only approximates exactness, to escape what we wrongly fancy is a greater blomish. Repetition may be bad, but surely inexactness is worse.

There are people in the world who will take a great deal of trouble to point out the faults in a religion or a language, and then go blandly about their business without suggesting any remedy. I am not that kind of a person, I have shown that the German language needs reforming. Very well, I am ready to reform it. At least I am ready to make the proper suggestions. Such a course as this might be immediate in another; but I have descent any suggestion of the suggestion. I have devoted upwards of nine full weeks, first and last, to a careful and critical study of this tongue, and thus have acquired a confidence in my ability to reform it which no mere superficial culture could have conferred upon me.

In the first place, I would leave out the Dative Case. It confuses the plurals; and besides, nobody ever knows when he is in th. Dative Case, except he discover it by accident—and then he does not know when or where it was that he got into it, or how he is ever going to get out of it again. The Dative Case is but an ornamental folly—it you never really bring down a subject with it as the present German range—you only eripple it. So I insist that this important good will ar up to out-door pars of speech should be brought forward to a position where it may be easily seen with aspects— birds and of sum-ul winter the naked eye.

Thirdly, I would import strong words from the English tongue—to swear with, and also to use in describing all sorts of vigorous things in a vigorous way.

Fourthly, I would reorganize the sexes, and distribute them according to the will of the Creator. This as a tribute of respect, if deit write

Charlett ; Mariat tures and lastly surpasso German

r to the

the sound prets the

ractness ;

ough the

afraid to

ne. They
se. That save used graph, we l, and so

tor some tes exact-

anoy is a

be bad.

who will

t out the

and then hout angkind of a rman lan-

am ready to make

& Course

her ; but ill weeks,

cal study

cquired a it which have con-

e out the

rals; and is in th t by acci-When or how he The n. folly-it the Verb load up tica that

Fifthly, I would do away with those great long compounded words; or require the intermissions for refreshments. To wholly do away with them would be best, for ideas are more easily received and digested when they come one at a time than when they come in bulk. Intellectual food is like any other; it is pleasanter and more beneficial to take it with a spoon than with a shovel.

Sixthly, I would require a speaker to stop when he is done, and not hang a string of those useless 'haben sind gewesen gebabt haben geworden seins' to the end of his This sort of gew-gaws undignify a speech, instead of adding a grace. They are therefore an offence, and should be dis-

Seventhly, I would discard the parenthesis. Also the re-Parenthesis, the re-reparenthesis, and the re-re-re-re-re-re-re-theses, and likewise the findal wide-1-aching all-enclosing King-parenthesis. I would require every individual, be he high or low, to unfold a plain straightforward tale, or else coil it and sit on it and hold his peace. Infractions of this law should be punishable

And eighthly and lastly, I would retain Zug and Sohlag, with their pendants, and discard the rest of the vocabulary. This would simplify the language.

I have now named what I regard as the

"'Verdamnt,' and its variations and enlargements, are words which have plenty of meaning, but the sounds are so mild and ineffectual that German ladies can use them without sin. German ladies who could not be induced to commit a cin py any persuasion or compulsion, promptly rip out one of these harmless little words when they tear a dress or don't like the soup. It sounds about as wicked as our 'Mgr. clous.' German ladies are constantly saying 'Ach! Gott!' Mein Gott!' Got in Himmel! 'Herr Gott!' 'Per Herr Jesus!' etc. 'hay think our ladies 'ave the same custom, perhaps, for I once heard a gentle and lovely old German lady say to a sweet young American girl, 'The two languages are so slike—how pleasant that is; 'we say' 'Ach'! Gott!' you say "Goddam."' most necessary and important changes. These are perhaps all I could be expected to name for nothing; but there are of pang-gestions which I can and will make in case my proposed application shall result in my my proposed application shall result in my being formally employed by the government in the work of reforming the language.

My philological studies have satisfied me that a gifted person ought to learn English (barring spelling and pronouncing), in 30 hours, French in 30 days, and German in 30 years. It seems manifest, then that the latter tongue ought to be trimmed down and repaired. If it is to remain as it is, it ought to be gently and reverently set saide among the dead languages, for only the dead bave time to learn it.

A FOURTH OF JULY ORATION IN THE GER-MAN TONGUE, DELIVERED AT A BANQUET OF THE ANGLO-AMERICAN CLUB OF STU-DENTS BY THE AUTHOR OF THIS BOOK.

GENTLEMEN,—Since I arrived, a month ago, in this old wonderland, this vast garden of Germany, my English tongue has so often proved a useless piece of baggage to me, and so troublesome to carry around, in system for baggage, that I finally set to work, last week, and learned the German language. Also! Es frent mich dass dies so ist, denn es muss, in ein hauptsachlich degree, hoflich sein, dass man auf ein occasion like this, sein, Rede in die Sprache des Landes worin he boards, aussprechen soll. Dafur habe ich, ans reinische Verlengenheit—no Vergangenheit—no, I mean Hoflichkeit— aus reinische Hoflichkeit habe ich resolved to tackle this business in the German language, um Gottes willen! Also! Sie mussen so froundlich sein, und verzeih mich die interlarding von ein oder zwei Englischer Worte, hie und da, denn ich finde dass die dentche is not a very copious language, and so when you've really got anything to say, you've got to draw on a language that can stand the strain.

Wenn aber man kann nicht meinem Rede verstehen, so werde ich ihm spater dasselbe ubersetz, wenn er solche Dienst verlangen wollen haben werden sollen sein hatte. (I don't know what wollen haben werden sollen sein hatte means, but I notice they always put it at the end of a German sentence— merely for general literary gorgeousness, I

This is a great and justly honoured day—a day which is worthy of the veneration in which it is held by the true patriots of all climes and nationalities, -a day which offers a fruitful theme for thought and speech; und meinem Freunde, no meinem Freuden—meines Freundes—well, take your choice, they're all the same price; I don't know which one is right—also! ich habe gehabt haben worden geween sein, as Goethe says, in his Paradise Lost—ich—ich—that is to say—ich—but let us change cars. Also! Die Amblick so viele Grossbrittanischer und Amerikanischer hier znammen-getroffen in Bruderliche concord, ist zwar a welcome and inspiriting spectacle. And what has moved you to it? Can the terse German tongue rise to the expression of this im-pulse? Is it Freundschaftsbezeigungenstadt-verordnetenversammlungenfamilienegenthumlichkeiten? Nein, o nein! This is a crisp and noble word, but it fails to pierce the marrow of the impulse which has gathered this friendly meeting, and produce diese Aphlich pains Aphlich ad this friendly meeting, and produce the Anblick—eine Anblick welche ist gut su Anblick—eine Anblick ale and a far country—eine Anblick solche als in die gewonliche Heidelberger phrase nennt man ein "schones Aussicht!" Ja, freilich naturlich wahrscheinlich ebensowohl! Also! Die Assuicht auf dem Konigstuhl mehr grosserer ist aber geist-lische sprechend nicht so schon, lob' Gott ! Because sie sind hier susammengetroffen, in Bruderlichem concord, ein grossen Tag su feiern, whose high benefits were not for one land and one locality only, but have conferred a measure of good upon all lands that know liberty to-day, and love it. Hundert know liberty to-day, and love it. Induced Jahre voruber, waren die Englander und die Amerikaner Feinde; aber heute sind die herzlichen Freunde, Gott sei Dank! May this good fellowship endure; may these banners here blended in amity, so remain; may they never any more wave over oppos-ing hosts, or be stained with blood which was kindred, is kindred, and always will be kindred, until a line drawn upon a map shall be able to say, "This bars the ancestral blood from flowing in the veins of the descendant !"

E

LEGEND OF THE CASTLES.

CALLED THE 'SWALLOW'S NEST' AND 'THE BROTHERS, AS CONDANSED FROM THE CAPTAIN'S TALE.

In the neighbourhood of three hundred years ago the Swallow's Nest and the larger castle between it and Neckarsteinach were owned and occupied by two old knights who were twin brothers, and bachelors.
They had no relatives. They were very rich. They had fought through the were and retired to private life — covered with honourable scars. They were honest, honourable men in their dealings, but the people had given them a couple of nick-names which were very suggestive,—Herr Givenaught and Herr Heartless. The cld knights were so proud of these names that if a burgher called them by their right once they would correct him.

The most renowned scholar in Europe, at that time was the Herr Dealer France Reik-

WAL feat afte

BAY

Giv the

Vi lau

the

tor sh

th

or that time, was the Herr Doctor Frans Reik-mann, who lived in Heidelberg. All Ger-many was proud of the venerable scholar, who lived in the simplest way, for great schelars are always poor. He was poor, as to money, but very rich in his sweet young daughter Hildegarde and his library. He had been all his life collecting his library, book by book, and he loved it as a miser loves his hoarded gold. He said the two strings of his heart were rooted, the one in his daughter, the other in his books; and that if either were severed he must die. Now, in an evil heur, hoping to win a mar-riage portion for his child, this simple old man had entrusted his small savings to a sharper to be ventured in a glittering speculation. But that was not the worst of it; he signed a paper,—without reading it. That is the way with poets and scholars, they always sign without reading. This cunning paper made him responsible for heaps of things. The result was, that of things. The result was, that one night he found himself in debt to the sharper eight thousand pieces of golds—an amount so prodigious that it simply stupified him to think of it. It was a night of woe in that house.

I must part with my library—I have nothing else. So perishes one heartstring, said the old man.

What will it bring, father ?' asked the

'Nothing! It is worth seven hundred pieces of gold; but by auction it will go for little or nothing.'

Then you will have parted with half of your heart and the joy of your life to no purpose, since so mighty a burden of debt will remain behind.'

'There is no help for it, my child. Our darlings must pass under the hammer. We must pay what we can.'
'My father I have a feeling that the dear

Virgin will come to our help. Let us not lose heart.

She cannot devise a miracle that will turn nothing into eight thousand gold pieces and less help will bring us little peace.

'She can do even greater things, my father. She will save us, I know she will.'
Towards morning, while the old man sat exhausted and asleep in his chair where he had been sitting before his books as one who 小田 4

but niek-Herr that if rope, at as Reik. Il Geror great poor, as young He library, the two e one in ks; and not die. a marple old ge to a as of it; it. That m, they cunning or heaps that in debt of gold! simply have nortstring,' ked the hundred Il go for half of o. to no

of debt Our er.

he dear Us not at will

i pieces oe. gs, my te will," an sat

here he ne who

Life 1

watches by his heinzed dead and prints the features on his manney for a solace in the aftertime of empty decolation, his daughter eprang into the room and gently woke him, save us. Three times has she appeared to me in my dreams, and said, "Go to the Herr Givenaught, go to the Herr Heartless, ask them to come and bid." There, did I not tell you she would save us, the thrice blessed Virgin!

Sad as the old man was, he was obliged to *Thou mightest as well appeal to the rocks their vastles stand upon as to the harder ones that lie in those men's breasts, my child. They bid on books writ in the learned tongues !—they can scarce read their own.'

But Hildegarde's faith was in no wise shaken. Bright and early she was on her way up the Neckar road, as joyous as a bird.

Meantime Herr Givenaught and Herr Heartless were having an early breakfast in the former's castle—the Sparrow's Nest and flavouring it with a quarrel; for although these twins bore a love for each other which almost amounted to worship, there was one subject upon which they could not touch without giving each other hard names—and yet it was the subject which they oftenest touched upon.

'I tell you,' said Givenaught, 'you will beggar yourself yet, with your insane squan-derings of money upon what you choose to consider poor and worthy objects. All these years I have implored you to stop this foolish oustom and husband your means, but all in vain. You are always lying to me about these secret benevolences, but you never have managed to deceive me yet. Every time a poor devil has been set upon his feet I have detected your hand in it-incorrigible ass !'

'Every time you didn't set him on his feet yourself, you mean. Where I give one unfortunate a little private lift, you do the same for a dozen. The idea of your swelling around the country and petting yourself with the nickname of Givenaught—intolerable humbug! Before I would be such a fraud as that, I would cut my right hand off. Your life is a continual lie. But go on, I have tried my best to save you from beggaring yourcelf by your riotous charities—now for the thousandth time I wash my hands of the consequences. A maundering old fool I that's what you are."

"And you a blethering old idiot!" roared Givenaught, springing up.

'I won't stay in the presence of a man who has no more delicacy than to call me such names. Mannerless swine!"

So saying, Herr Heartless sprang up, in a passion. But some lucky accident intervened, as usual, to change the subject, and the daily quarrel ended in the customary daily loving reconciliation. The grey-headed old secontricities parted, and Herr Heartless walk-ad off to his own castle. ed off to his own castle.

Half an hour later, Hildegarde was standing in the presence of Herr Givenaught. He heard her story, and said—

'l am sorry for you my child, but I am very poor, I care nothing for bookish rubbish, I shall not be there.'

He said the hard words kindly, but they nearly broke poor Hildegarde's heart, never-nearly broke poor Hildegarde's neart, nevertheless. When she was gone the old heartbroken banker muttered, rubbing his hande—

'It was a good stroke. I have saved my brother's pocket this time, in spite of him. Nothing else would have prevented his rushing off to resoue the old scholar, the pride of Germany, from his troubles. The poor child won't venture near him after the rebuil she has received near him after the rebuff she has received from his brother the Givenaught."

But he was mistaken. The Virgin had commanded, and Hildegarde would obey. She went to Herr Heartless and told her story. But he said coldly—

I am very poor, my child, and books are nothing to me. I wish you well, but I shall not come.

When Hildegarde was gone, he chuckled

' How my fool of a soft-headed soft-hearted brother would rage if he knew how cunningly I have saved his pocket. How he would have flown to the old man's resoue !

But the girl won't venture near him now.'
When Hildegarde reached home, her father asked her how she had prospered. She said-

The Virgin has promised, and she will keep her word, but not in the way I thought. She knows her own ways, and they are

The old man patted her on the head, and smiled a doubting smile, but he honoured her for her brave faith, nevertheless.

Next day the people assembled in the great hall of the Ritter tavern, to witness the auction—for the proprietor had said the treasure of Germany's most honoured sonshould be bartered away in no meaner place. Hildegarde and her father sat close to the books, silent and sorrowful, and holding each other's hands. There was a great crowd of people present. The bidding began— 'How much for this precious library, just as it stands, all complete?' called the auctioneer. 'Fifty pieces of gold?'

'A hundred!'

Two hundred !

Three!

'Five hundred!' ' Five twenty-five !

A brief pause. 'Five forty !'

A longer pause, while the auctioneer redoubled his persuasions.

'Five forty-five ! "

A heavy drag-the auctioneer persuaded, pleaded, implored—it was useless, everybody remained silent—
'Well, then,—going, going—one—two—
'Five hundred and fifty!'

This in a shrill voice, from a bent old man, all hung with rage, and with a green patch over his left eye. Everybody in his vicinity turned and gazed at him. It was Givenaught in disguise. He was using a disguised voice,

'Good I' oried the auctioneer. 'Going, going-one-two-

'Five hundred and sixty!'

This, in a deep, harsh voice, from the midst of the crowd at the other end of the room. The people near by turned, and saw an old man, in a strange costume, supporting himself on crutches. He wore a long white beard, and blue spectacles. It was Herr Heartless, in disguise, and using a disguised voice.

'Good again! Going, going—one—'

Sensation. The crowd raised a ober, and some one cried out,

'Go it, Green patch!' This ticklea the audience and a score of voices shouted, 'Go t, Green-patch !

'Going-going-going-third and last call one, two

Seven hundred!

Huzzah !-well done, Crutches ! ord a voice. The crowd took it up, and sharted altogether, 'Well done, Crutches !

Splendid, gentlemen! you are doing magnificently. Going, going-

'A thousand ! 'Three cheers for Green-patch! Up and at him, Crutches !'

'Go. going-'Two mousand !'

And while the people cheered and shouted, 'Crutches' muttered, 'Who can this devil be, that is fighting so to get these useless books ?-but no matter, he shan't have them. The pride of Germany shall have his books if it beggars me to buy them for him.

'Going—going—going—' Three thousand !'

*Come, everybody—give a rouser for Green-patch ! And while they did it. Green-'This muttered, patch ' orivpla is plainly a funatio; but the old soholar shall have his books, nevertheless, though 13y pocket sweat for it.'

'Going—going—'
'Four thousand!'

' Huzza !'

'Five thousand !' 'Huzza!'

'Six thousand !'

'Huzza !'

'Seven thousand!'

'Huzza!'

'EIGHT thousand !'

'We are saved, Father I told you the Holy Virgin would keep her word!' 'Blessed be her sacred usme!' said the old scholar, with emotion. The crowd roared. 'Huzza, huzza, huzza—at him again, Greenpatch !

'Going—geing—'
'Ten thousand!' As Givenaught shouted this, his excitement was so great that he forgot himself and used his natural voice. His brother recognized it, and muttered,

'Aha, you are there, are you, besotted old fool? Take the books, I know what you'll do with them!'

So saying, he slipped out of the place, and the auction was at an end. Givenaught shouldered his way to Hildegarde, whispered a word in her ear, and then he, also, van-The old scholar and his daughter ished. embraced, and the former said, 'Truly, the Holy Mother has done more than she promised, child, for she has given you a splendid marriage portion—think of it, two thousand pieces of gold ?

"And more still, cried Hildegarde, for she has given you back your books; the stranger whispered me that he would none of them—"the honoured son of Germany must keep them," so he said. I would I might have asked his name and kissed his hand and begged his blessing; but he was Our Lady's angel, and it is not meet that we of earth should venture speech with them that dwell above.

't have

nser for

Greenoripple olar sitall ough 139

word!'
id the old
d roared,
in, Green-

ht shouted at that he rral voice. muttered, besotted

the place, divensught, whispered also, vans daughter Truly, the n she proou a splentwo thou-garde, 'for cooks; the would none Germany I would I kissed his out he was set that we with them

F.—GERMAN JOURNALS.

The daily journals of Hamburg, Frankfort, Baden, Munich and Augsburg are all con-structed on the same general plan. I speak of these because I am more familiar with them than any other German papers. They contain no 'editorials' whatever; no 'personals,'— and this is rather a merit than a demerit, perhaps; no funny paragraph column; no police court reports; no reports of proceedings of the higher courts; no information about prize fights or other dog fights, horse races, walking matches, yachting contests, rifie matches, or other sporting matters of any sort; no reports of banquet-speeches; no department of curious odds and ends of docting fact and gossip; no 'rumours' about anything or anybody; no prognostications or prophecies about anything or anybody; no lists of patents granted or sought, or any reference to such things; no abuse of public officials, big or little, or complaints against them, or praises of them, no religious column Saturdays, no rehash of cold sermons Mondays; no 'weather indications;' no 'local item' unveilings of what is happening in town—nothing of a local nature, indeed, is mentioued, beyond the movements of some prince or the proposed meeting of some deliberative body.

After so deliberate a list of what one can't find in a German daily, the question may well be asked, 'What can be found in It is easily answered :- A child's handful of telegrams, mainly about European national and international movements; letter-correspondence about the same things, market reports. There you have it. That is what a German daily is made of. A German daily is the slowest and saddest and dreariest of the inventions of man. Our own dailies infuriate the reader, pretty often; small pica lines, and is lighted up with eight pica head-lines. The bill of fara is as follows: First, under a pica head-line, to enforce attention and respect, is a four line sermon arging maukind to remember that although they are pilgrims her below, they are yet heirs of heaven : and chat 'When they depart from earth they soar to heaven.' Perhaps a four-line sermon in a Saturday paper is the sufficient German equivalent of the eight or ten columns of sermons which the New Yorkers get in their Monday morning papers. The latest news (two days old), follows the four-line sermon, under the pice head line "Telegrams,"—these are "tele-graphed" with a pair of soissors out of the "Augsonrger Zeitung" of the day before. Those telegrams consist of fourteen and twothirds lines from Berlin, tifteen lines from

Hill manifest of the state

Vienna, and two and five-eighths lines from Calcutta. Thirty-three small pica lines of telegraphic news in a daily journal in a King's Capital of 170,000 inhabitants, is surely not an over-dose. Next, we have the pica heading, "News of the Day," under which the following facts are set forth: rince Leopold is going on a visit to Vienna, six lines; Prince Arnulph is coming back from Russia, two lines; the Landtag will meet at 10 o'clock in the morning and consider an election law, three lines and one word over; a city go rernment item, five and one-half lines; prices of tickets to the proposed grand Charity Ball, twenty-three lines—for this one it on occupies almost one fourth of the entire first page; there is to be a wonderful Wagner concert in Frankfurston-the-Main, with an orchestra of one hundred and eight instruments; seven and one-half lines. That concludes the first page. Eighty-five lines, altogether, on that page, including three head-lines. About fifty of those lines, as one perceives, deal with local matters; so the reporters are over-worked.

Exactly one-half of the second page is occupied with an opera-criticism, fifty-three lines (three of them being head lines) and Death Notices, ten lines.

Dash Notices, 'ten lines.'
The other half of the second page is made up of two paragraphs under the head of 'Miscellaneous News.' One of these paragraph tells about a quarrel between the Czar of Russia and his eldest son, twenty-one and a half lines; and the other tells us about the atrocious destruction of a peasant child by its parents, forty lines, or one fifth of the total of the reading matter contained in the paper.

Consider what a fifth part of the reading matter of an American daily paper issued in a city of 170,000 inhabitants amounts to I Think what a mass it is. Would any cue suppose I could so snugly tuck away such a mass in a chapter of this book that it would be difficult to find it again if the reader lost his place? Surely not. I will translate that child-murder word for word, to give the reader a realizing sense of what a fifth part of the reading matter of a Munich daily actually is when it comes under measurement of the eye:

From Oberkreuzberg, January 21, the Donan Zeitning receives a long account of a crime, which we shorten as follows: In Remetusch, a village near Eppenschlag, lived a young married couple with two phildren, one of which, a boy aged five, was born three years before the marriage. For this reason, and also because a relative at Iggensbach had bequeath M400 ($100) to the boy, the heartless father considered him in the way; so the unnatural parents determined to sacrifice him in the cruelest possible manner. They proceeded to starve him slowly to death, meantime frightfully maltreating him—as the village people now make known, when it is too late. The boy was shut up in a hole, and when people passed by he cried, and implored them to give him bread. His long continued tortures and deprivations destroyed him at last, on the third of January. The sudden (sic) death of the child created suspicion, the more so as the body was immediately clothed and laid upon the bier. Therefore, the coroner gave notice, and an inquest was held on the 6th. What a pitiful spectacle was disclosed then! The body was a complete skeleton. The stomach and intestines were utterly empty, they contained nothing what-ever. The flesh on the corpse was not as thick as the back of a knife, and incisions in it brought not a drop of blood. There was not a piece of sound skin the size of a dollar on the whole body; wounds, scars, bruises, discoloured extravasated blood, everywhere—even on the soles of the feet there were wounds. The oruel parents asserted that the boy had been so bad that they had been obliged to use severe punishments, and that he finally fell over a bench and broke his neck. However, they were arrested two weeks after the inquest and put in the prison at Deggendorf.'

they were arrested two weeks he inquest. What a homeafter the round that has The kind of police briskness rather more reminds me of my native land than German journalism.

I think a German daily journal doesn't do any good to speak of, but at the same time it doesn't do any harm. That is a very large merit and should not be lightly weighed, nor lightly thought of.

The German humorous papers are beautifully printed, upon fine paper, and the illustrations are finely drawn, finely engraved, and are not vapidly funny, but deliciously so. So also, generally speaking, are the two or three terre sentences which accompany the pictures. I remember one of these pictures; an almost dilapidated tramp is ruefully contemplating some coins which lie in his open palm; he says, Well, begging is getting played out. Only about 5 marks ($1 25) for the whole day; many an official makes more! And I call to mind a picture of a commercial traveller who is about to unroll his samples :

Merchant (pettiably)-No, don't. I don't want to buy anything!

Drummer—If you please, I was only going to show you-

Merchant-But I don't wish to see them ! Drummer—(after a pause, pleadingly)-But do you mind letting me look at them !— I haven't seen them for three weeks!

THE END.

weeks home-police of my peen't do e time it ery large ched, nor e beautithe illusengraved, engraved,
e the two company
these pics refully
lie in his ag is getrks ($1 25)
ial makes oture of a t to unroll t. I don't only going see them ! adingly)— at them !— ks !

